Executive Summary

Myanmar's security landscape from November 12-19, 2026, was marked by intensified military operations, significant diplomatic engagements, and a notable crackdown on cybercrime. The military junta continued its aerial bombardments in Rakhine State, causing civilian casualties and infrastructure damage, while facing resistance from ethnic armed organizations. Diplomatically, Myanmar engaged with major powers, including ongoing discussions with the United States regarding rare earth resources and online scam networks, and reaffirmed cooperation with China and Russia. ASEAN leaders maintained restrictions on Myanmar's political representation but signaled a potential path to gradual re-engagement based on progress on the Five-Point Consensus, a stance that drew a threat from the junta leader to review ties. Concurrently, authorities conducted a major raid on cyber scam operations in Yangon, indicating a shift of these criminal activities into urban centers. The period also saw the International Court of Justice's impending ruling on Rohingya genocide allegations, adding international pressure on the regime.

Key Security Developments

- Intensified Military Airstrikes in Rakhine State

On November 13, Myanmar military airstrikes struck the Byarla internally displaced-persons camp in Ponnagyun Township, Rakhine State, killing at least 12 civilians, including a five-year-old child, and injuring 18 others. Shelters and medical facilities were damaged in this incident, which was the second attack on the camp within two months. The military also conducted coordinated air and naval attacks on at least four bridges along the Taungup–Maei–Ramree–Kyaukphyu road within the Wunbaik Reserve Mangrove Forest on November 14, disrupting regional logistics. The Arakan Army (AA) warned of retaliation if the military junta continues its attacks on civilian settlements and public infrastructure across Arakan State.

- Ongoing Clashes in Sagaing–Kachin Border Region

From November 4–14, Kachin Independence Army (KIA) and allied People's Defence Force units captured three military outposts near Sipein, Hparpant, and Pinwei in the Mawlu area along the Sagaing–Kachin border. Airstrikes and ground fighting persisted throughout this period, highlighting continued territorial contestation in border regions.

- Military Operations in Mon–Bago Border Region

The military reported capturing 11 resistance positions, including a National Unity Government (NUG) regional command headquarters and a Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) battalion headquarters, following six days of operations involving four armed engagements in the Mon–Bago border region from November 4–10. This indicates sustained efforts by the junta to target and dismantle resistance strongholds.

- Major Cybercrime Crackdown in Yangon

On November 12, Myanmar's military regime raided the Golden River Residence Condo in Yangon's Thaketa Township, arresting 106 suspected online scammers, including 52 Chinese, eight Vietnamese, and 46 Myanmar citizens. Authorities seized over 120 computers and laptops and nearly 200 mobile phones, stating the gang ran online investment fraud schemes targeting Chinese, Japanese, South Korean, Indian, Brazilian, and Colombian citizens. This operation signals a growing shift of Myanmar's online scam industry from border enclaves to urban centers.

- Diplomatic Engagement with the United States

Myanmar's coup leader turned civilian president Min Aung Hlaing stated on November 18 that talks were ongoing with the United States, which is now eyeing Myanmar's rare earth resources. A top US official, Assistant Secretary of State for Intelligence and Research Michael Vance, reportedly joined talks with Min Aung Hlaing in Naypyidaw in September, focusing ostensibly on freeing a US businessman and tackling online scam networks. This engagement marks a departure from previous US policy aimed at isolating the military regime.

- Reaffirmation of China-Myanmar Cooperation

Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi met Myanmar's Minister for National Planning, Investment and Foreign Economic Relations Aung Kyaw Hoe on November 3, discussing efforts to promote the in-depth development of the China-Myanmar community with a shared future. China expressed support for Myanmar in achieving political reconciliation and welcomed more Chinese enterprises to invest. Wang Yi also pressed Myanmar to intensify efforts to combat scams and prevent a "resurgence of chaos" in the Myawaddy crime hub.

- Myanmar's Review of ASEAN Ties

On November 18, President Min Aung Hlaing announced a review of Myanmar's relationship with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), accusing the regional grouping of treating Myanmar unfairly. This came after ASEAN leaders, at their summit in Manila on November 15, maintained restrictions on Myanmar's political representation but signaled a "calibrated engagement" and a "phased and progress-based" approach for gradual restoration if concrete progress is made on the Five-Point Consensus.

- EU Humanitarian Aid and Human Rights Condemnation

The EU allocated an additional €16 million in humanitarian aid on November 6 for people affected by conflict in Myanmar and for Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh, focusing on food assistance, healthcare, and nutrition. On November 18, the EU delivered a General Statement at the UN General Assembly Third Committee, strongly condemning widespread and systematic human rights violations and abuses, including aerial attacks, mass killings, and arbitrary detention, and reiterated calls for an immediate end to violence and inclusive dialogue.

- Eurasian Economic Union (EEC) Cooperation Meeting

The third meeting of the Joint Working Group on Cooperation between the EEC and the Government of Myanmar was held in Nay Pyi Taw on November 12. Discussions focused on developing manufacturing industry, transport and infrastructure, improving customs regulation, strengthening business cooperation, and digitalizing the economy.

- International Court of Justice (ICJ) Ruling on Rohingya Genocide

The International Court of Justice (ICJ) was scheduled to rule on November 19 regarding allegations by The Gambia that Myanmar's brutal repression of the Rohingya breached the 1948 UN Genocide Convention. This impending ruling carries significant symbolic weight for accountability and could increase international pressure on Min Aung Hlaing.

- Diplomatic Friction with Germany

Myanmar's Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued a formal warning to the German Embassy's Chargé d'Affaires in Yangon, Mr. Mathias Licharz, on November 10, over a video published on November 8. The video questioned the genuine freedom of U Win Myint, who had been granted a presidential pardon, and referred to the UN's position on his status, which Myanmar viewed as inconsistent with diplomatic discretion and an insult to its Head of State.

Cyber Threat Landscape

During this period, the primary cyber threat highlighted was the pervasive issue of online scam networks operating within Myanmar. The military regime conducted a significant raid on November 12 at the Golden River Residence Condo in Yangon's Thaketa Township, arresting 106 individuals involved in online financial scams and illegal gambling. This operation revealed a trend of these criminal networks shifting their operations from traditional border enclaves to urban centers, adapting to previous crackdowns. These scam gangs are reportedly moving into private homes and new hideouts, indicating their resilience and adaptability despite military efforts.

The targeted scams included online investment fraud schemes against citizens from China, Japan, South Korea, India, Brazil, and Colombia. The US State Department's policy document from August also emphasized the importance of tackling these online scam networks, many of which are based in Myanmar.

The Myanmar military has repeatedly portrayed its operations against scam centers as evidence of its commitment to fighting transnational crime, but some familiar with the industry question whether these operations truly target the organizers and financiers behind the networks. Allegations suggest that security personnel have taken valuable equipment during raids while publicly destroying less valuable devices. International pressure, particularly from China and Thailand, has intensified for action against these networks.

Background: Threat actors known to target Myanmar include Naikon (China-linked), APT41 (China-linked), Mofang (China-linked), and an Unnamed Actor (China-linked).

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

Myanmar's internal conflict and diplomatic shifts during this period have significant geopolitical implications, particularly for regional stability and relations with major powers. The ongoing civil war, characterized by intensified military airstrikes and resistance activities, continues to destabilize border regions, with potential for cross-border spillover, as seen previously on the Thailand border. This instability poses challenges for neighboring countries, including humanitarian concerns and trafficking risks.

Relations with major powers are complex and evolving. The United States has shown a calibrated re-engagement with Myanmar's military-backed government, a notable shift from its post-coup isolation policy. This engagement is driven by a desire to access Myanmar's "bountiful rare earth resources" and to address online scam networks targeting Americans. However, this rapprochement is viewed with concern by some, who argue it risks legitimizing the regime and may not even be effective in securing rare earths, as these resources are often located in areas controlled by ethnic armed groups fighting the junta.

China remains a crucial strategic partner, supporting Myanmar in achieving political reconciliation and promoting economic cooperation, including investment. China also exerts pressure on Myanmar to combat cyber scam operations, reflecting its own national interests in curbing these cross-border crimes. The relationship is underpinned by a shared border and economic interconnectivity projects.

Russia continues to deepen its ties with Myanmar, with high-level diplomatic meetings focusing on bilateral cooperation in political dialogue, trade, economic, and investment areas. Myanmar's role as ASEAN's coordinator for dialogue relations with Russia (2024-27) further solidifies this relationship. This deepening alliance, following a five-year military cooperation agreement signed in early 2026, provides the junta with a source of weapons and diplomatic support, potentially complicating efforts by Western powers to isolate the regime.

The European Union maintains a critical stance, condemning human rights violations and providing humanitarian aid, while advocating for an end to violence and inclusive dialogue. The diplomatic friction with Germany over comments regarding U Win Myint highlights the EU's continued focus on human rights and democratic principles, which often clash with the junta's narrative.

ASEAN's approach to Myanmar remains a significant regional dynamic. While maintaining restrictions on the junta's political representation, the bloc's decision to pursue "calibrated engagement" and a "phased and progress-based" approach signals a potential softening, albeit conditional on progress on the Five-Point Consensus. This delicate balance reflects internal divisions within ASEAN and the challenge of addressing the Myanmar crisis without undermining regional unity.

EU Relations and Implications

Myanmar's relations with the European Union during this period were characterized by continued humanitarian support alongside strong condemnation of human rights abuses and a push for democratic principles. The EU allocated an additional €16 million in humanitarian aid on November 6, specifically targeting conflict-affected populations within Myanmar and Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh, focusing on essential needs like food, healthcare, and nutrition. This aid package is part of a larger commitment, with over €50 million in humanitarian aid provided since January 2026 for the crisis and its regional impact. On November 18, the EU delivered a General Statement at the UN General Assembly, unequivocally condemning the widespread and systematic human rights violations by the military, including aerial attacks and mass killings, and reiterated calls for an immediate end to violence and inclusive dialogue. The EU also expressed regret over the continued deterioration of the political, security, human rights, and economic situation in Myanmar.

The security and cyber developments have direct implications for EU interests and EU-funded cooperation. The intensified military operations and civilian harm, particularly in Rakhine State, pose significant challenges to the delivery of humanitarian aid and the safety of aid workers, impacting the effectiveness of EU humanitarian projects. The ongoing conflict and human rights abuses underscore the EU's consistent calls for accountability and a genuine democratic process. While the EU's relationship outlook was assessed as "Stable" in August 2026, the diplomatic friction with Germany over the comments regarding U Win Myint demonstrates the persistent tension between the EU's human rights advocacy and the junta's assertions of sovereignty. The EU's digital projects, such as SCOPE Digital — Copernicus Earth Observation Southeast Asia, could be impacted by the unstable security environment and the government's cyber policy, especially if internet access is disrupted or if the focus remains heavily on combating cybercrime rather than broader digital development.

Military and Defense Analysis

The Myanmar military, also known as the Tatmadaw, continued to employ intensive air and ground operations against resistance forces and ethnic armed organizations during this period. Airstrikes remained a prominent feature of their strategy, particularly in Rakhine State, where civilian infrastructure, including IDP camps and bridges, were targeted. This reliance on aerial bombardment indicates a continued effort to compensate for ground losses and project power, a trend observed since 2025 where the Tatmadaw was responsible for 71% of drone attacks. The military also conducted coordinated air and naval attacks, as seen in the Wunbaik Reserve Mangrove Forest, demonstrating a multi-faceted approach to disrupt resistance logistics.

Force posture analysis suggests the military is actively engaged in territorial contestation, as evidenced by operations in the Mon–Bago border region where they reported capturing 11 resistance positions. However, resistance forces, such as the Kachin Independence Army and People's Defence Force units, also demonstrated offensive capabilities by capturing three military outposts in the Sagaing–Kachin border area. This indicates a dynamic and fluid conflict landscape where neither side holds absolute dominance. While specific defense spending trends for this exact period are not available, earlier reports from November 11, 2026, indicated the Myanmar junta was seeking a record military budget, suggesting a sustained commitment to military operations despite widespread poverty. Modernization programs likely continue to focus on air assets and drone capabilities, given their increased use in recent years.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): The immediate outlook for Myanmar suggests a continuation of intense armed conflict, particularly in Rakhine State and other border regions. Military air operations are likely to persist at current or elevated intensity, with no clear indicators of negotiated de-escalation or ceasefires. Civilian harm and displacement are expected to escalate, especially in high-risk areas like displacement camps in Rakhine and Karen-held territories. Cross-border spillover, as seen previously, may recur, potentially impacting neighboring countries like Thailand. Diplomatic engagements with the US, China, and Russia are likely to continue, with the junta seeking further legitimacy and resources, while ASEAN's "calibrated engagement" approach will be tested by the lack of concrete progress on the ground. The crackdown on cyber scam networks is expected to continue, but these criminal operations will likely adapt and persist by shifting locations and methods.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: Rakhine State remains a critical flashpoint due to ongoing military offensives, civilian casualties, and the Arakan Army's threat of retaliation. Other border regions, particularly those with active ethnic armed organizations, will also remain high-risk areas for clashes and instability. The urban centers, including Yangon, could see continued efforts to dismantle cybercrime operations, potentially leading to further arrests and disruptions. The outcome of the ICJ ruling on Rohingya genocide allegations on November 19 could also serve as a flashpoint, potentially increasing international pressure and influencing the regime's actions.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the intensity and location of military airstrikes, particularly on civilian targets and IDP camps; the scale and success of resistance group offensives; the junta's response to international pressure, especially following the ICJ ruling; the nature and frequency of diplomatic engagements with major powers; and the effectiveness of efforts to curb cybercrime networks. Any significant shifts in ASEAN's policy or further threats from the junta regarding its membership would also be crucial to observe.

Strategic recommendations: For international actors, a coordinated and consistent approach to pressuring the military regime for an end to violence and protection of civilians is essential. Humanitarian aid must be sustained and access ensured to affected populations. Diplomatic engagement should be carefully calibrated to avoid legitimizing the regime without tangible human rights improvements. For businesses and individuals operating in Myanmar, enhanced security protocols and risk assessments are crucial, especially in conflict-affected areas and regarding cyber threats. Continued monitoring of the evolving geopolitical landscape and regional dynamics is vital for informed decision-making.
