Executive Summary

China's security posture during the first week of March 2026 was characterized by a continued focus on military modernization, heightened cybersecurity measures, and complex diplomatic engagements. Beijing announced a 7% increase in its defense budget for 2026, signaling sustained investment in advanced capabilities and personnel amidst an ongoing anti-graft campaign within the People's Liberation Army (PLA). Concurrently, China intensified its cybersecurity efforts with a new national strategy for industrial data security and a firm stance against perceived foreign cyber threats. Diplomatically, relations with the European Union remained strained by trade disputes and a lack of high-level engagement, while a potential stabilization in US-China ties was observed, albeit with underlying strategic competition. Regional tensions persisted in the South China Sea, with ongoing Chinese maritime activities and skepticism regarding a code of conduct, and in the Taiwan Strait, where China continued its gray-zone tactics despite a temporary dip in PLA air incursions.

Key Security Developments

- Defense Budget Increase and Military Modernization

On March 5, 2026, China announced a 7% increase in its defense budget for the year, reaching approximately 1.9096 trillion yuan ($276.8 billion). This marks the 11th consecutive year of single-digit growth and is intended to fund military salary increases, training, drills around Taiwan, cyberwarfare capabilities, and advanced equipment purchases. The increase aligns with President Xi Jinping's objective to achieve a "world-class military" by 2049 and complete modernization by 2035.

- PLA Anti-Graft Purge Continues

The announced defense budget increase occurs amidst an ongoing and sweeping anti-graft purge within the People's Liberation Army (PLA). This campaign has led to the ousting of top general Zhang Youxia in January 2026 and investigations into other high-ranking officials, including Politburo member Ma Xingrui, who was removed from his post in July 2025 and did not appear at the opening session of the CPPCC on March 4. The purges are reportedly spurred by concerns over military corruption and disloyalty, aiming to ensure political loyalty and remove obstacles to modernization.

- Advanced Naval Submarine Development

The People's Liberation Army Navy (PLAN) may be preparing to launch its first Type 09V guided missile nuclear submarine (SSGN). Satellite imagery from February 9 revealed the submarine moved into the launch bay of the Huludao shipyard in Liaoning Province. This new SSGN, featuring an "X-stern" rudder and larger displacement, would significantly enhance PLAN undersea warfare capabilities and its ability to deter a US surface fleet in the western Pacific during a potential Taiwan contingency.

- National Cybersecurity Strategy for Industrial Sector

China's Ministry of Industry and Information Technology (MIIT) released a new strategy this week to improve data security within the nation's industrial sector by the end of 2026. The plan aims to contain "major risks" by implementing protective measures for over 45,000 companies, conducting 30,000 data security training sessions, and adding 5,000 cybersecurity professionals. This initiative responds to frequent threats like ransomware attacks and vulnerability backdoors, reflecting China's increasing skepticism of foreign cyberattacks.

- China's Stance on US Cyber Activities

On March 2, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesperson Mao Ning stated that China will ensure its cyber security with all necessary measures. This declaration came in response to reports that the U.S. Department of War was in talks with leading AI companies about partnerships to conduct automated reconnaissance of China's power grids, utilities, and sensitive networks. Mao Ning accused the U.S. of being the "leading source of instability in cyberspace" and of conducting cyber attacks against China's key infrastructure.

- Amendments to Cybersecurity Law

Effective January 1, 2026, amendments to China's Cybersecurity Law came into effect. These revisions expand state support for AI development and regulation, explicitly encouraging fundamental AI research, key technology development, and related infrastructure construction, while also strengthening ethical guidelines and risk monitoring. The amendments also tighten compliance obligations for network operators and critical information infrastructure, significantly increasing fines for violations and expanding extraterritorial jurisdiction to cover all activities undermining China's cybersecurity.

- Fluctuating PLA Air Incursions into Taiwan's ADIZ

In February 2026, the PLA flew 147 sorties into Taiwan's de facto Air Defense Identification Zone (ADIZ), marking the lowest monthly total since Taiwanese President William Lai Ching-te took office in May 2024. While this decline is consistent with a typical seasonal reduction in PLA ADIZ incursions each winter, incursions may increase in the spring after the CCP's "Two Sessions" meetings conclude in March.

- Taiwan's Defense Budget Proposal

The opposition Kuomintang (KMT) in Taiwan released a 350 billion New Taiwan Dollar (US$11 billion) special defense budget on March 5. This proposal is less than one-third the size of the Lai administration's initial budget, though the KMT indicated a willingness to increase it if the United States approves more arms sales to Taiwan. Taiwan's Legislative Yuan was set to review this and other versions of the budget on March 6.

- South China Sea Code of Conduct Doubts

On March 2, a veteran South China Sea expert, Wu Shicun, stated that a 2026 code of conduct for the contested waters is "100 percent not likely" to be finalized this year. Wu cited the Philippines' current role as ASEAN chair, predicting that Manila would inevitably raise the 2016 arbitration ruling that rejected Beijing's expansive claims, making successful negotiation difficult.

- Continued Chinese Maritime Assertiveness in West Philippine Sea

Chinese maritime and air activities in the West Philippine Sea are expected to persist throughout 2026, with the People's Liberation Army Navy (PLA Navy), China Coast Guard (CCG), and maritime militia operating in an increasingly integrated and deterrence-focused manner. On March 7, a Philippine Coast Guard aircraft received multiple radio challenges from a Chinese warship while patrolling over Bajo de Masinloc, with the Chinese vessel asserting that the PCG aircraft was inside "China's territory."

- EU-China Diplomatic Stagnation and Trade Frictions

EU-China relations entered 2026 in a phase of "cautious engagement" rather than a reset, marked by strategic disunity within the EU and ongoing trade frictions. Chinese President Xi Jinping declined to meet EU leaders earlier in 2026, and no dates have been set for high-level EU-China engagement. Germany's Chancellor Friedrich Merz visited Beijing on March 1, but his focus was primarily on bilateral alignment with France and the UK, rather than EU institutions. Beijing has also launched investigations into European sectors such as pork, dairy products, and brandy, in response to EU countervailing duties imposed on Chinese electric vehicles in October 2024.

- China's Mediation Efforts in the Middle East

China expressed grave concern over the tense situation in the Middle East following US-Israeli strikes against Iran. On March 1, China condemned the assassination of Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Khamenei as a violation of Iranian sovereignty. Foreign Minister Wang Yi engaged in phone calls with counterparts from Russia, Iran, Oman, France, Israel, Saudi Arabia, and the UAE, urging an immediate cessation of military operations and a return to dialogue. China also announced its intention to send Special Envoy Zhai Jun to the Middle East soon to actively work for de-escalation.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

China's security developments this week have significant geopolitical implications, particularly for regional stability and relations with major global powers. The 7% increase in China's defense budget underscores Beijing's unwavering commitment to military modernization, which is perceived by many regional neighbors and the United States as a challenge to the existing power balance in Asia. This sustained military buildup, including the potential launch of a new Type 09V SSGN, fuels an arms race in Asia and prompts countries with territorial disputes, such as the Philippines, to strengthen ties with Washington. The ongoing anti-graft purges within the PLA, while aimed at internal loyalty and efficiency, could also introduce an element of unpredictability in military decision-making, though the overall direction of modernization remains clear.

In the South China Sea, the expert assessment that a Code of Conduct is "simply not achievable" in 2026 highlights the deep-seated disagreements and China's continued assertiveness in the disputed waters. The persistent Chinese maritime and air activities in the West Philippine Sea, including radio challenges to Philippine vessels, demonstrate Beijing's strategy of incremental encroachment and "gray zone" tactics to solidify its claims. This directly impacts regional stability, pushing countries like the Philippines to deepen security cooperation with the US and Australia, as evidenced by their joint patrol exercise in mid-February. The US-Taiwan trade agreement, with its clause allowing nullification if Taiwan engages in trade deals with China, further complicates cross-strait relations and reinforces the strategic competition between Washington and Beijing over Taiwan's international standing.

Relations with the European Union remain complex and largely stalled at a high diplomatic level. The lack of scheduled high-level EU-China engagement and the focus of German Chancellor Merz's visit on bilateral ties rather than EU-wide cooperation underscore the strategic disunity within Europe regarding China. This fragmentation potentially weakens the EU's collective leverage in addressing trade imbalances and human rights concerns. Meanwhile, the potential for stabilization in US-China relations, as suggested by the Pentagon's shift in strategic focus and anticipated meetings between Presidents Trump and Xi, could offer a period of reduced overt confrontation. However, underlying issues like technology competition and Taiwan remain critical flashpoints, and the US's concerns about Chinese infiltration of its critical networks indicate that strategic rivalry continues beneath any surface calm. China's active diplomatic engagement in the Middle East, calling for a ceasefire and sending a special envoy, positions Beijing as a potential mediator, aiming to protect its economic interests in the region and project its influence on global security issues.

Military and Defense Analysis

China's military and defense posture continues its trajectory of rapid modernization, driven by a substantial and consistently increasing defense budget. The 7% budget hike for 2026 to $276.8 billion is allocated towards enhancing personnel welfare, intensifying training, conducting drills around Taiwan, bolstering cyberwarfare capabilities, and acquiring advanced equipment. This sustained investment is critical for the People's Liberation Army (PLA) to achieve its stated goal of becoming a "world-class military" by 2049, with significant modernization milestones targeted for 2035. The ongoing anti-graft campaign, while disruptive in the short term, is ultimately intended to strengthen the military's political loyalty and operational effectiveness by rooting out corruption and streamlining command structures.

A key development in capability enhancement is the potential launch of the Type 09V guided missile nuclear submarine (SSGN). This new class of submarine, larger and more maneuverable than its predecessors, is designed to carry vertical launch system (VLS) cells for anti-ship or land-attack cruise missiles. Its introduction would significantly diversify the threats faced by the US Navy in the Western Pacific, adding a potent long-range undersea component to the PLA's existing anti-access/area denial (A2/AD) network, which already includes surface, air, and land-based anti-ship capabilities. This development underscores China's focus on projecting power and deterring intervention in scenarios like a Taiwan contingency. Furthermore, the PLA's experimentation with transmitting false aircraft signals to confuse adversaries, expanding on similar tactics with spoofed ship signals, indicates a growing sophistication in cognitive warfare and deception capabilities, aimed at disguising malign activities and eroding adversary threat awareness.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): In the immediate future, China will likely continue its assertive posture in the South China Sea, with persistent maritime and air activities, particularly around disputed features and in the West Philippine Sea. The "Two Sessions" political conclave, which concludes in March, may be followed by an uptick in PLA military exercises, especially around Taiwan, as the seasonal decline in ADIZ incursions typically reverses in spring. Cybersecurity will remain a high priority, with the MIIT's new industrial data security plan rolling out and China continuing to vocalize its concerns over foreign cyber threats. Diplomatic engagements with the EU are expected to remain cautious and fragmented, with bilateral visits potentially overshadowing broader EU-China institutional dialogue. US-China relations might experience a period of relative calm, driven by anticipated high-level meetings between Presidents Trump and Xi, focusing on specific economic deals, but underlying strategic competition will persist.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: The Taiwan Strait remains the most critical flashpoint. Any perceived escalation of US-Taiwan military cooperation or arms sales could trigger a strong military response from Beijing, potentially involving larger-scale drills or increased gray-zone operations. The South China Sea is another high-risk area, where continued Chinese assertiveness and the unlikelihood of a Code of Conduct agreement in 2026 could lead to further confrontations with claimant states, particularly the Philippines, and their allies. The Middle East conflict, while geographically distant, poses a risk to China's economic interests, particularly oil imports through the Strait of Hormuz, and any direct or indirect involvement could draw Beijing into a more complex geopolitical quagmire. Finally, cybersecurity incidents involving critical infrastructure or state-sponsored espionage could rapidly escalate tensions, especially between China and the US, given mutual accusations of cyber malfeasance.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and scale of PLA military exercises around Taiwan and in the South China Sea, particularly after the "Two Sessions." The progress, or lack thereof, in EU-China trade disputes (e.g., EU countervailing duties on EVs and China's retaliatory investigations) will signal the direction of economic relations. Any concrete outcomes from anticipated US-China presidential meetings and the language used in official statements will be crucial for assessing the stability of bilateral ties. Domestically, the impact and scope of the PLA anti-graft purges should be watched for signs of internal instability or further high-profile removals. In the Middle East, the effectiveness of China's diplomatic efforts and the reception of its special envoy will indicate Beijing's growing influence in global crisis management.

Strategic recommendations: For international actors, a coordinated approach to address China's assertive actions in the South China Sea and Taiwan Strait is essential, combining diplomatic pressure with strengthened regional security partnerships. Investing in enhanced cybersecurity defenses and intelligence sharing is critical to counter China's evolving cyber capabilities and infiltration attempts. European nations should strive for greater unity in their China policy to enhance their collective bargaining power on trade and human rights. For businesses operating in China, a thorough assessment of cybersecurity compliance under the amended Cybersecurity Law and the new industrial data security strategy is paramount, alongside contingency planning for potential trade disruptions. Finally, monitoring China's engagement in global flashpoints like the Middle East will be vital to understand its evolving role as a major power and its potential impact on international security norms.

- Jimmy Lai and the rule of law in Hong Kong | Letter (2026-03-05 17:08)

Bi Haibo of the Chinese embassy in the UK responds to an editorial Regarding your editorial (The Guardian view on Jimmy Lai: what Britain's caution says about its relationship to Beijing's power, 10 February), I wish to make the following points.

First, Jimmy Lai is by no means the “defender of democracy” portrayed in some western media narratives, but a principal figure behind the turmoil in Hong Kong. He was a key planner and participant in a series of anti-China incidents aimed at destabilising Hong Kong, and served as an agent and pawn of external anti-China forces. What he has done would constitute criminal offences in any country and must be punished in accordance with the law.

Second, Hong Kong returned to China in 1997, and the Sino-British Joint Declaration has long fulfilled its historical mission. The constitutional and legal basis for the Chinese government’s governance of Hong Kong lies in China’s constitution and Hong Kong’s basic law. Since the enactment of the National Security Law in 2020, Hong Kong has restored stability, and the rights and freedoms of residents are better protected in a more secure environment.

Third, Hong Kong affairs are China’s internal affairs, and Hong Kong’s judiciary does not allow external interference. Moreover, China does not recognise dual nationality. Jimmy Lai is regarded in Hong Kong solely as a Chinese citizen.

We urge the Guardian to respect China’s sovereignty and the rule of law in Hong Kong and to report on related issues in an objective and fair-minded manner.

"Bitterfeld, Bitterfeld, where dirt falls from the sky," went a popular saying. Located in the intensely industrialised Chemical Triangle of the German Democratic Republic (GDR), in the 1980s Bitterfeld became known as the dirtiest town in Europe. Its chemical industry and lignite mines dumped toxic waste in waterways, and the air carried a concentrate of sulphur dioxide some 40 times today's levels. Europe would soon be rattled out of its postwar reliance on heavy industry, in favour of cheap imports from abroad. In the last days of the GDR, environmental activism brought the coup de grâce. The 1988 release of the undercover film Bitter Things from Bitterfeld shed light on the appalling living conditions in the Chemical Triangle, and the city's chemical plants were soon decommissioned. - Iran conflict puts India's cherished Middle East neutrality to the test (2026-03-02 09:00)

That doctrine is now being tested to the limit. The killing of Iranian supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei by US-Israeli strikes within days of Narendra Modi returning from a high-profile visit to Tel Aviv provided instant ammunition for the...

The Philippines cannot afford an aircraft carrier, could not sustain one if it had it and, according to most analysts, does not need one. What it needs is messier, cheaper and harder to photograph, they say: a web of missiles, patrol boats, frigates and surveillance assets designed not to project power, but to deny it. Two recent developments have made that choice harder to ignore. Last month, Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos Jnr openly mused that an aircraft carrier with “accompanying...

Nowhere is this more evident than in electrifying the taxi fleet, where the quarter-century timeline floated bears little resemblance to what is standard practice in neighbouring...
