Security Analysis Report: Japan (October 25 - November 01, 2026)

Executive Summary

During the period of October 25 to November 01, 2026, Japan's security posture was significantly shaped by intensified military exercises, a surge in cyberattacks, and complex diplomatic engagements amidst regional tensions. Joint military drills with the United States, notably Keen Sword 27, showcased advanced missile capabilities and a focus on defending Japan's southwestern islands, signaling a robust deterrence strategy against China and North Korea. Concurrently, Japan faced an unprecedented wave of AI-powered cyberattacks, prompting an urgent government response and highlighting critical vulnerabilities in its digital infrastructure. Diplomatic efforts included strengthening alliances with the US and Germany, while relations with China remained strained due to maritime confrontations and historical issues. North Korea's multiple ballistic missile launches further underscored the volatile regional security environment, necessitating Japan's continued defense buildup and strategic re-evaluation.

Key Security Developments

- Military Activities and Exercises: Keen Sword 27 Concludes with Advanced Deployments

The large-scale Keen Sword 27 joint military exercise between Japan and the United States, which began on October 19, concluded on October 29, 2026. Involving approximately 45,000 Japanese troops and 12,000 American service members, the drills focused on the defense of Japan's southwestern islands and waters around its northern coasts. A significant development was the first public deployment exercise of the Japan Ground Self-Defense Force's Type 25 Surface-to-Ship Guided Missile at the Onohara Training Area (Nagasaki and Saga prefectures) on October 25, demonstrating its 1,000 km range and integration with US targeting support. The US also deployed its Typhon midrange missile system to Kadena Air Base in Okinawa, capable of firing Tomahawk cruise missiles up to 1,600 kilometers, though it was not fired during the exercises. These exercises, which included participants from seven other nations, aimed to simulate real-world defense contingencies and strengthen deterrence against China and North Korea.

- Defense Policy and Strategic Shifts: Strengthening Deterrence and Public Outreach

Japan's Defense Minister Shinjiro Koizumi affirmed the nation's commitment to an "exclusively defense-oriented" policy while reviewing its three key national security documents, expected to be completed by year-end. This review aims to strengthen Japan's deterrence and response capabilities, with a focus on acquiring counterstrike capabilities. The government also initiated a public outreach campaign from late October, utilizing social media, videos with public figures, and advertisements in Tokyo to explain security policy to different age groups, a move that has raised concerns about steering public opinion. This push aligns with a broader shift in defense policy since 2022, involving increased military spending, longer-range weapons acquisition, and eased arms export restrictions.

- Diplomatic Relations: Enhanced Alliances Amidst Regional Tensions

Japan actively engaged in high-level diplomatic meetings. On October 28, Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi held a Japan-Germany Summit Meeting with Chancellor Friedrich Merz, concurring on strengthening cooperation in security and defense, economic security, and advanced technology. Foreign Minister Motegi attended the G20 Foreign Ministers' Meeting and the Quad Foreign Ministers' Meeting on October 31, where ministers reaffirmed cooperation for a Free and Open Indo-Pacific and emphasized economic security. A Japan-US Defense Ministerial Meeting on October 28-29 saw Defense Minister Koizumi and US Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth agree to strengthen military deterrence and response capabilities, and establish a facility in Japan for joint production of AMRAAM air-to-air missiles. However, relations with China remained strained, marked by continued Chinese Coast Guard activity near the Senkaku Islands and Chinese naval vessels crossing the Osumi Strait. Prime Minister Takaichi's previous remarks on potential intervention in a Taiwan crisis continued to fuel tensions with Beijing.

- Security Incidents and Threats: North Korean Missile Launches

On October 29, North Korea launched approximately 10 ballistic missiles towards waters off its east coast, which were believed to have fallen outside Japan's Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ). Japan's Chief Cabinet Secretary Minoru Kihara condemned the launches as a serious threat to regional peace and security, though no damage to Japanese territory or maritime zones was reported. This followed an earlier launch on October 12, where two ballistic missiles were fired, one traveling over 910 km. These repeated provocations underscore the persistent and evolving missile threat from North Korea.

- Defense Acquisitions and Arms Deals: Joint Missile Production

A significant development in defense acquisitions was the agreement between the US and Japan to establish a facility in Japan for the final assembly and inspection of AIM-120 Advanced Medium-Range Air-to-Air Missiles (AMRAAM), essential for F-35 fighter jets. This joint production initiative is part of Japan's efforts to strengthen its defense industrial capacity and enhance its deterrence capabilities. Japan is also continuing its acquisition of domestically produced Type 25 missiles and US-manufactured Tomahawk cruise missiles to bolster its counterstrike capabilities, with deliveries of Tomahawks scheduled through fiscal year 2027.

- Cybersecurity: "October Surge" and Government Response

Japan experienced an "October Surge" of AI-powered cyberattacks, with at least 20 major Japanese companies reporting breaches since late September, and 134 related items logged on the dark web in the first 15 days of October. The GMO Internet Group suffered a significant breach of its Onamae.com Desktop Cloud service, potentially affecting 26,739 servers and leading to unauthorized trades and financial losses for customers. Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi's government held an urgent ministerial meeting on October 26 to discuss countermeasures, announcing an emergency cybersecurity package and considering "access-neutralization measures" under the newly effective Active Cyber Defense Act (October 1, 2026). A Chinese-developed AI penetration-testing tool called ARTEX was linked to part of this wave of attacks.

- Maritime and Border Security: Senkaku Islands Confrontations

Tensions in the East China Sea persisted, with reports of Chinese Coast Guard vessels confronting Japanese vessels near the disputed Senkaku Islands (Diaoyu in China) on October 28. Japanese officials stated their coast guard protected a fishing crew and ordered Chinese vessels to leave, while Beijing maintained its officers lawfully expelled the Japanese boat. This incident, alongside earlier reports of Chinese naval vessels, including three destroyers and a coast guard ship, crossing the Osumi Strait and heading into the Pacific Ocean, highlights ongoing challenges to Japan's maritime security and sovereignty.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

Japan's security developments during this period significantly underscore its proactive stance in shaping regional stability, particularly in the Indo-Pacific. The intensified joint military exercises with the United States, such as Keen Sword 27, and the agreement for joint AMRAAM missile production, reinforce the Japan-US alliance as the cornerstone of regional security. This strengthened alliance, coupled with Japan's pursuit of counterstrike capabilities and increased defense spending, is a direct response to the perceived growing military assertiveness of China and the persistent threats from North Korea. The deployment of advanced missile systems and the focus on defending southwestern islands like Yonaguni, strategically close to Taiwan, signal Japan's commitment to deterring any attempts to unilaterally change the status quo by force or coercion in the East China Sea and potentially the Taiwan Strait.

However, these actions also contribute to heightened regional tensions. China views Japan's defense buildup and closer ties with the US as "accelerating remilitarization". The repeated confrontations between Chinese and Japanese Coast Guard vessels around the Senkaku Islands exemplify the ongoing friction and the risk of escalation in disputed maritime zones. Prime Minister Takaichi's previous statements regarding potential Japanese intervention in a Taiwan crisis further exacerbate Beijing's concerns and contribute to a "dangerous new equilibrium" in Japan-China relations. The diplomatic efforts through the Quad and with Germany demonstrate Japan's strategy to build a broader network of like-minded partners to uphold a "Free and Open Indo-Pacific" and counter Chinese influence.

The frequent ballistic missile launches by North Korea, including the approximately 10 missiles fired on October 29, maintain a high level of instability in Northeast Asia. These provocations necessitate Japan's robust missile defense capabilities and continued cooperation with the US and South Korea, even as diplomatic relations with Russia remain strained, as evidenced by Foreign Minister Motegi's demarche regarding the detention of a Japanese national and the situation in Ukraine. The "October Surge" in cyberattacks, potentially linked to a Chinese AI tool, adds another layer of complexity, highlighting the evolving nature of hybrid warfare and the need for comprehensive cybersecurity defenses across the region.

Military and Defense Analysis

Japan's military and defense posture during this period reflects a significant acceleration in its modernization programs and a strategic shift towards enhanced deterrence and response capabilities. The conclusion of Keen Sword 27 showcased the operational integration of advanced weaponry, particularly the Type 25 Surface-to-Ship Guided Missile, which has a range of approximately 1,000 km and is considered a cornerstone of Japan's counterstrike capabilities. The deployment of this missile system outside its base for the first time, along with the presence of the US Typhon midrange missile system in Okinawa, indicates a move towards more realistic and potentially offensive-oriented joint exercises.

Defense spending trends continue to rise, supporting the acquisition of long-range missiles like the Type 25 and US-manufactured Tomahawk cruise missiles, with deliveries expected through fiscal year 2027. The agreement to establish a facility in Japan for the assembly and inspection of AMRAAM air-to-air missiles signifies a deepening of defense industrial cooperation with the US and a commitment to bolstering air defense capabilities, particularly for F-35 fighter jets. While Japan maintains its "exclusively defense-oriented" policy, the emphasis on "strengthening deterrence and response capabilities" and acquiring "counterstrike capabilities" represents a notable evolution in its defense doctrine, allowing for the potential to strike enemy bases if attacked. This modernization is also addressing personnel shortages within the Self-Defense Forces, with increased spending on personnel and a review of military compensation planned.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): In the immediate future, Japan is likely to continue its robust defense buildup and deepen military cooperation with its allies. The government will finalize the revision of its three key national security documents by year-end, which will further formalize its strategic shifts, including the acquisition of counterstrike capabilities and increased defense spending. We can expect continued public outreach campaigns to garner support for these policy changes. Cybersecurity will remain a critical focus, with the government expected to implement its emergency cybersecurity package within the next week, potentially including "access-neutralization measures" under the Active Cyber Defense Act. Maritime patrols and vigilance around the Senkaku Islands will remain high, given the ongoing Chinese Coast Guard activities. North Korea's missile provocations are likely to persist, maintaining a high alert level for Japan's air and missile defense systems.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: The Senkaku Islands remain a primary flashpoint, with the risk of accidental escalation due to frequent encounters between Japanese and Chinese vessels. Any significant Chinese military action around Taiwan would be considered an "existential crisis" for Japan, potentially drawing Tokyo into a conflict. The waters around Japan's southwestern islands, including Yonaguni, will continue to be areas of heightened military activity and potential confrontation. The ongoing wave of sophisticated cyberattacks, especially those linked to state-sponsored actors or advanced AI tools, poses a significant risk to Japan's critical infrastructure and economic stability. North Korea's continued development and testing of ballistic missiles, particularly those with advanced capabilities, represent a constant threat of miscalculation or accidental conflict.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the specifics of Japan's revised national security documents and their implementation, particularly regarding the scope and deployment of counterstrike capabilities. The frequency and nature of Chinese military and Coast Guard activities in the East China Sea and around the Senkaku Islands will be crucial. Developments in Japan-China diplomatic relations, especially any high-level dialogues or further retaliatory measures, should be closely watched. The effectiveness of Japan's new cybersecurity measures and its ability to mitigate future AI-powered attacks will be important. Furthermore, any changes in North Korea's missile testing patterns or rhetoric will be critical indicators of regional stability. The progress of joint defense industrial projects, such as the AMRAAM facility, will also signal the deepening of alliances.

Strategic recommendations: Japan should continue to strengthen its alliances, particularly with the United States, to enhance deterrence and collective security. Investing further in advanced missile defense systems and offensive counterstrike capabilities, while ensuring transparency and clear communication of their defensive nature, is crucial. A multi-layered approach to cybersecurity, including international cooperation and robust domestic defenses, is essential to counter evolving cyber threats. Japan should also pursue diplomatic channels to de-escalate tensions with China, while firmly upholding its territorial claims. Finally, continued efforts to address personnel shortages in the Self-Defense Forces through improved recruitment and retention strategies are vital for sustaining its long-term defense posture.
