Comprehensive Security Analysis Report for Macau (November 05 - November 12, 2026)

Executive Summary

Macau's security landscape during this period was dominated by the verdict in its first national security trial, which saw former lawmaker Au Kam San sentenced to 12.5 years in prison for subversion and collusion with foreign forces. This conviction triggered significant diplomatic friction with the European Union, which strongly condemned the sentence as an erosion of fundamental freedoms. In response, the Macau government firmly rejected these criticisms as interference in its internal affairs. While no major cyber incidents were reported, Macau's authorities continued to emphasize enhancing cybersecurity resilience, particularly against emerging AI-driven threats, and engaged in counter-terrorism and cybercrime cooperation with Portugal. The upcoming APEC Economic Leaders' Week in nearby Shenzhen also prompted heightened regional security alerts, impacting cross-border travel and operations.

Key Security Developments

- National Security Trial Verdict and Sentencing

On November 5, 2026, Macau's Court of First Instance announced the verdict in the city's first national security trial, convicting former pro-democracy lawmaker Au Kam San, 69, of subversion of state power, establishing ties with foreign groups to endanger national security, and breach of secrecy. Au Kam San was sentenced to a consolidated term of 12 years and six months imprisonment, having been detained since July 2025 under national security laws expanded in 2023. This landmark case marks a significant tightening of national security enforcement in the Special Administrative Region.

- Diplomatic Condemnation from the European Union

The European Union, on November 6, 2026, expressed strong rejection of Au Kam San's conviction, deploring the 12.5-year prison sentence and warning of a deterioration of freedoms in Macau. The EU had previously condemned his arrest in 2025, citing concerns about the "erosion of political pluralism". This stance highlights growing international concern over the implementation of national security legislation in Macau and its impact on the "one country, two systems" principle.

• Macau Government Rejects EU Interference

The Macao Special Administrative Region (MSAR) Government strongly condemned the European Union's statements regarding the national security trial, labeling them as "unfounded remarks" and "interference in China's internal affairs and in the affairs of the MSAR". The government asserted its judicial independence and called on the EU to cease its criticism, emphasizing that the case was a purely internal affair. This diplomatic exchange underscores the increasing tension between Macau and Western entities over human rights and judicial autonomy.

• Cooperation with Portuguese Judiciary Police on Transnational Crime

On November 3, 2026, Macau's Judiciary Police (PJ) met with their Portuguese counterparts to discuss enhanced cooperation in combating high-risk crimes, including terrorism, drug trafficking, money laundering, and cybercrime. The discussions focused on reinforcing information exchange, joint staff training, and crime prevention actions, particularly with Portuguese-language educational institutions in Macau. This collaboration demonstrates Macau's commitment to international partnerships in tackling complex security threats.

• Heightened Regional Security for APEC Leaders' Week

The U.S. Consulate General Hong Kong & Macau issued a security alert on November 9, 2026, warning of heightened security, road closures, traffic control, and crowds in and around Shenzhen from November 13-19, 2026, due to the APEC Economic Leaders' Week. This event will impact land border crossings between Hong Kong and Shenzhen, and potentially airports, high-speed rail stations, and ferry terminals in Shenzhen and Hong Kong, indicating broader regional security measures that could affect Macau's connectivity.

• Ongoing Cybersecurity Resilience Efforts

During the period of November 2 to November 9, 2026, no specific major cyber incidents or data breaches targeting Macau were publicly reported. However, Macau's government continues to acknowledge a "severe cybersecurity landscape" and emerging risks, particularly from the rapid development of AI technology. The Cybersecurity Incident Alert and Response Centre is actively deepening exchanges and cooperation with counterparts in Guangdong and Hong Kong to jointly safeguard the Greater Bay Area's cybersecurity defenses.

• Government Commitment to AI and Data Security Guidelines

Macau's Judiciary Police (PJ) Director Sit Chong Meng previously pledged the government's commitment to improving compliance guidelines for AI security and data security, strengthening cybersecurity talent, and enhancing the overall cybersecurity resilience of civil society. This commitment, outlined in Macau's 3rd Five-Year Plan, highlights a proactive approach to managing the evolving cyber threat landscape.

Cyber Threat Landscape

During the period of November 05 to November 12, 2026, no specific major cyber incidents or data breaches targeting Macau were publicly reported. However, the Macau government consistently acknowledges a "severe cybersecurity landscape" and emerging risks, particularly from the rapid development of Artificial Intelligence (AI) technology, which is making criminal tactics more intelligent, automated, and hacker intrusions faster and stealthier. The government is actively responding to these challenges by committing to improving compliance guidelines for AI security and data security, strengthening cybersecurity talent, and enhancing the overall cybersecurity resilience of civil society.

The Cybersecurity Incident Alert and Response Centre, a collaborative body involving the Judiciary Police, Public Administration and Civil Service Bureau, and Post and Telecommunications Bureau, is deepening exchanges and cooperation with its counterparts in Guangdong and Hong Kong to jointly safeguard the cybersecurity defenses of the Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area (GBA). This regional cooperation is crucial given the interconnected digital infrastructure. The Macao Post and Telecommunications Bureau also conducted a cybersecurity and anti-scam lecture on October 20, 2026, reminding seniors not to resell real-name registered SIM cards, indicating ongoing efforts to raise public awareness against telecommunications scams and cyber threats.

Background: Known threat actors, such as BRONZE HIGHLAND (a China-linked advanced persistent threat group), are known to target Macau, though no specific activity by this group was reported during this week.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

The conviction of Au Kam San under Macau's national security law has significant geopolitical ramifications, particularly in its relations with major Western powers. The strong condemnation from the European Union, which views the sentence as an erosion of fundamental freedoms, places Macau at the center of a broader international debate on human rights and autonomy within China's "one country, two systems" framework. This friction could strain future dialogues and cooperation between Macau and the EU, impacting areas beyond security.

Macau's firm rejection of external interference aligns with Beijing's consistent stance on internal affairs, reinforcing China's sovereignty over its Special Administrative Regions. This development further solidifies the narrative of increasing alignment between Macau's legal and political systems with those of mainland China, mirroring similar trends observed in Hong Kong. The heightened security environment in the Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area (GBA), particularly with the upcoming APEC Economic Leaders' Week in Shenzhen, underscores Macau's integral role in China's regional security architecture. While the APEC event is outside Macau, the associated security measures and potential travel disruptions highlight the interconnectedness of the region's security dynamics.

The ongoing cooperation between Macau's Judiciary Police and their Portuguese counterparts on counter-terrorism and cybercrime demonstrates a continued, albeit selective, engagement with international partners on specific security issues. However, the diplomatic fallout from the national security trial may overshadow such cooperation, as Western nations prioritize concerns over rule of law and human rights. The broader strategic landscape sees China asserting greater control over its SARs, a move that is likely to continue generating scrutiny and diplomatic challenges from the US and EU, while Russia's influence in this specific context remains minimal.

EU Relations and Implications

Macau's relations with the European Union during this period were primarily characterized by significant diplomatic friction stemming from the national security trial of Au Kam San. The EU, through statements deploring the 12.5-year sentence, highlighted concerns about the "erosion of political pluralism" and fundamental freedoms in Macau. This criticism was met with strong opposition from the MSAR Government, which condemned the EU's remarks as "unfounded" and "interference in China's internal affairs," asserting Macau's judicial independence. This exchange underscores a deepening ideological divide and a challenge to the common values that historically underpinned EU-Macau relations, which are based on the 1992 Agreement for Trade and Cooperation.

These security and cyber developments have direct implications for EU interests and EU-funded cooperation in Macau. While the EU remains Macau's second-largest trading partner and third-largest source of foreign direct investment, the diplomatic tensions over human rights and judicial autonomy could strain future dialogues and cooperation, including in areas like trade, education, and development cooperation. The EU's annual reports on Macau, which have consistently noted an erosion of fundamental freedoms, are likely to continue reflecting these concerns, potentially impacting the scope and nature of future EU engagement and cooperation projects in the region.

Military and Defense Analysis

During the reporting period, there were no specific major military activities or significant defense policy shifts reported for Macau. The People's Liberation Army (PLA) Macao Garrison, established in 1999, is responsible for defending Macau, but its activities are generally low-profile and governed by the Garrison Law, which stipulates non-interference in local affairs unless requested for disaster relief.

While a "Counter terrorism drill to be done on Friday" near the East Asian Games Dome was mentioned in a news snippet, the specific date within the November 5-12, 2026, period is not confirmed, and similar drills have been reported in previous years (e.g., July 2024). The last reported rotation of PLA troops in Macau occurred in August 2020, and a military open house with an obstacle course was held in May 2026, both outside the current reporting window. Macau's defense spending and capability developments are not publicly detailed, as its defense is primarily handled by the PLA Garrison. The focus remains on internal security, counter-terrorism, and cyber defense, often in cooperation with mainland Chinese and, to a lesser extent, international law enforcement agencies.

Outlook and Forecast

- Short-term trends (1-3 months)

In the immediate future, Macau is likely to experience continued scrutiny from international bodies, particularly the European Union, regarding its human rights record and the application of national security laws. The diplomatic friction stemming from the Au Kam San trial is expected to persist, potentially leading to further critical statements from the EU and firm rebuttals from Macau and Beijing. The upcoming APEC Economic Leaders' Week in Shenzhen (November 13-19, 2026) will maintain a heightened security posture across the Greater Bay Area, including Macau, with potential impacts on cross-border travel and logistical operations. Macau's government will likely continue its focus on enhancing cybersecurity resilience, particularly against AI-driven threats, and promoting public awareness campaigns against cyber scams.

- Critical flashpoints and risk areas

The primary flashpoint remains the interpretation and application of Macau's national security laws, particularly concerning freedom of expression and political dissent. Any further arrests or convictions under these laws, or perceived erosion of judicial autonomy, could trigger renewed international condemnation and diplomatic tensions. The cyber realm remains a critical risk area, with the increasing sophistication of AI-powered criminal tactics posing a constant threat to Macau's critical infrastructure and data security. While no specific incidents were reported this week, the underlying vulnerability remains. Regional security concerns related to major events like APEC, or any potential instability in the broader South China Sea, could also indirectly impact Macau through tightened border controls and increased security measures.

- Indicators to monitor

Key indicators to monitor include further statements or actions from the EU and other international organizations regarding human rights in Macau, particularly in response to the national security trial. Observe any changes in trade or cooperation agreements between Macau and the EU. Track reports of cyber incidents or data breaches, especially those targeting critical infrastructure or government entities, and monitor the effectiveness of Macau's cybersecurity initiatives. Also, watch for any public statements or activities from the PLA Macao Garrison, which could signal shifts in defense posture or increased military presence. Developments in the Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area (GBA), including security cooperation and economic integration, will also be important indicators of Macau's evolving security and geopolitical alignment.

- Strategic recommendations

Macau should consider enhancing transparency regarding its judicial processes, particularly for national security cases, to mitigate international criticism and uphold the principles of the rule of law. Continued investment in advanced cybersecurity defenses, talent development, and international cooperation (beyond traditional partners) is crucial to counter evolving cyber threats. From a diplomatic perspective, Macau could seek to engage in more constructive dialogues with international partners, including the EU, to address concerns while upholding its sovereignty. For businesses and foreign entities operating in Macau, it is advisable to conduct thorough due diligence on local laws, particularly national security and cybersecurity regulations, and to ensure robust data protection measures are in place.

More than 14,000 traffic accidents were recorded in 2025, with nearly 7,000 in the first half of this year – down about 5% year-over-year – but accidents causing injuries or deaths rose rather than fell. The new provisions allow the government, in specified circumstances, to allocate space

• AI poses new oversight challenges for Macau's gaming and financial sectors (2026-11-10 00:48)

With "Black October" cyberattacks, restrictions on AI banking agents and multibillion-dollar investment plans dominating technology headlines, the Times sought an assessment of what the disorder means for Macau. In an exclusive interview, AI governance strategist and author Jonathan Gropper warned that the greatest risks may come not from systems breaking rules, but from following them while defeating their purpose. Having survived scandals, impeachments and a criminal conviction, Trump approached the midterms as another hurdle he could clear through personality, insisting the economy was fine and war with Iran was necessary to [⋯]
