Executive Summary

Myanmar experienced a week of intensified internal conflict from November 04 to November 11, 2026, marked by significant military offensives and a high civilian death toll from airstrikes across several states. The military junta achieved a notable gain by seizing a key resistance headquarters and multiple bases along the Mon State and Bago Region border, indicating a continued push against opposition forces. Concurrently, Myanmar engaged in active diplomacy with major global powers, including China, Russia, and the United States, driven by strategic interests such as rare earth minerals and counter-terrorism efforts. However, these diplomatic overtures were juxtaposed with internal repression, including internet shutdowns that hampered civilian safety and resistance communication, and a diplomatic spat with Germany highlighting ongoing international scrutiny of the regime's actions.

Key Security Developments

- Intensified Military Airstrikes and Civilian Casualties

The Myanmar military conducted multiple airstrikes resulting in significant civilian casualties. Between November 1-2, airstrikes in Mrauk-U, Kyauktaw, Kyaukpyu, and Pauktaw townships in Rakhine State hit a makeshift clinic and maternity ward, killing at least 12 people, including a newborn, and wounding 32 others. Another airstrike between November 1-4 struck a school or educational shelter in Loikaw Township, Kayah State, killing three children and injuring five to eight others. On November 7, a school and residential area in Nyaung Pin Lay village, Kani Township, Sagaing Region, was bombed by three gyrocopters, killing eleven people, including four children.

- Myanmar Military Seizes Resistance Headquarters and Bases

Myanmar's military reported seizing a key resistance military command headquarters and 10 other bases in the jungle along the border between Mon State and the Bago Region. This six-day operation, which began around November 3, targeted the National Unity Government (NUG)'s Special Region Military Command and Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) bases, with the regime claiming to have seized numerous small arms, ammunition, drones, and vehicles.

- Cross-border Tensions with Thailand

Cross-border tensions remained elevated following an October 29 junta shelling incident that wounded Thai civilians. Thailand responded by suspending unofficial border crossings through November 5 and maintaining heightened military precautions, signaling concern about further spillover of the conflict.

• Junta Deploys FPV Suicide Drones

Myanmar's military junta has shifted tactics in Karen State, deploying FPV (First-Person View) attack drones against resistance forces south of Myawaddy. This strategic change began around November 7 during clashes near Minletpan Village and the Theahpyuchaung area, following heavy infantry losses and warnings from Thailand regarding stray artillery rounds.

• Increased US Diplomatic Engagement

The United States has expanded its diplomatic engagement with Myanmar's military-backed government, moving from limited contact to more frequent direct outreach. This includes high-level meetings in September and October 2026, the lifting of some sanctions on military-linked individuals, and a focus on issues such as combating scam centers and gaining access to Myanmar's rare earth minerals.

• China Reaffirms Support and Economic Cooperation

On November 3, Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi met with Myanmar's Minister for National Planning, Investment, and Foreign Economic Relations, Aung Kyaw Hoe, in Beijing. Wang Yi reaffirmed China's support for Myanmar's political reconciliation and economic development, emphasizing China as a strategic partner and discussing the advancement of the China-Myanmar Economic Corridor. China also eased restrictions on trade through several Myanmar border crossings controlled by Beijing-linked ethnic armed organizations.

• Russia Deepens Bilateral Cooperation

Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov met with Myanmar's Foreign Minister U Tin Maung Swe on November 3, on the sidelines of the 4th Minsk International Conference on Eurasian Security. Discussions focused on deepening bilateral cooperation in political dialogue, trade, economic, and investment ties, building on existing agreements and a military cooperation pact signed in February 2026.

• Diplomatic Friction with Germany (EU)

On November 10, Myanmar's Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs, U Ko Ko Kyaw, summoned Mr. Mathias Licharz, Chargé d'Affaires of the German Embassy in Yangon. The summoning was in response to a video released by the Embassy on November 8, which Myanmar deemed a "grave insult" to its Head of State and an "unacceptable interference" in its domestic jurisdiction.

• Widespread Internet Shutdowns Impacting Civilian Safety

Internet services, particularly Starlink connections, have been increasingly cut off in Myanmar since June 2026, with over 20% of devices losing service by October. This has severely affected conflict-affected regions like Sagaing, Mandalay, Magway, Rakhine, and Kayah State, hindering the timely dissemination of airstrike alerts, military movement warnings, and access to humanitarian aid, leading to higher civilian casualties.

- Myanmar Lobbies US for Rare Earth Investment

Myanmar's military-led government actively urged the United States to increase investment in its rare earths sector, a critical industry currently dominated by China. This appeal was made around November 9, following a US State Department strategy document from October that outlined plans for greater US influence and access to these resources.

- India Receives New Myanmar Ambassador

On November 6, Indian President Droupadi Murmu received the credentials of U Aye Min Htwe, the new Ambassador of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar, at Rashtrapati Bhavan in New Delhi. This formal procedure marks the official commencement of his diplomatic representation and reaffirms the longstanding diplomatic ties between the two neighboring countries.

Cyber Threat Landscape

During the period of November 04 to November 11, 2026, the most significant cyber-related development in Myanmar was the ongoing and intensified internet shutdowns imposed by the military junta. These shutdowns, particularly affecting Starlink connections, have been in effect since June 2026, with over 20% of devices cut off by October. This communication blackout has had severe humanitarian consequences, directly impacting the safety of civilians in conflict zones such as Sagaing, Mandalay, Magway, Rakhine, and Kayah State by preventing them from receiving crucial warnings about airstrikes and military movements, as well as hindering access to medical aid and evacuation routes. The lack of reliable internet also complicates the ability of local People's Defense Forces (PDF) to receive timely intelligence, as demonstrated by an incident on November 7 in Nyaung Pin Lay village where high casualties were attributed to communication failures during an airstrike.

There were no specific reports of new cyber incidents, data breaches, or exploited vulnerabilities affecting Myanmar organizations by state-sponsored or criminal actors during this particular week. The government's cyber policy appears to prioritize control and suppression of information in conflict areas, rather than proactive defense against external threats, as evidenced by the deliberate cutting of internet services. Background: Threat actors known to target Myanmar include Naikon, APT41, Mofang, and an Unnamed Actor, all of which are China-linked.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

Myanmar's internal conflict and its recent diplomatic engagements have significant geopolitical repercussions, reshaping regional stability and its relations with major global powers. The intensified civil war, marked by widespread airstrikes and civilian casualties, continues to destabilize border areas, particularly with Thailand, which has had to suspend border crossings due to stray artillery fire. This ongoing instability poses a direct threat to regional security and humanitarian concerns.

The week saw a notable shift in Myanmar's diplomatic isolation, with increased engagement from the United States, China, and Russia. The US, in a strategic pivot, is deepening engagement with Myanmar's military-backed government, driven by a desire to counter China's influence and gain access to Myanmar's "bountiful rare-earth deposits." This approach, outlined in a US State Department strategy, aims to make Washington a major trading partner and facilitate peace discussions linked to mineral access. However, this move has drawn criticism from Myanmar's National Unity Government (NUG), which warns against prioritizing US interests over genuine peace and democratic principles.

China, a long-standing strategic partner, reaffirmed its support for Myanmar's political reconciliation and economic development, particularly through the China-Myanmar Economic Corridor. Beijing's approach is a "carrot and stick" strategy, supporting the regime while also easing trade restrictions with ethnic armed organizations (EAOs) in northern Shan and Kachin states, demonstrating its ability to influence various actors within Myanmar. This complex dynamic highlights China's deep economic and security interests along its border with Myanmar. Russia also continued to deepen its ties, with foreign ministers meeting to discuss cooperation in political dialogue, trade, and investment, building on a military cooperation pact signed earlier in 2026. This reinforces Russia's role as a key military and diplomatic ally for the junta.

The competition for Myanmar's rare earth minerals between the US and China is a critical element of the broader strategic landscape. Myanmar's military-led government is actively lobbying the US for investment, seeking to diversify its economic partnerships and potentially reduce its reliance on China. However, the reality is complicated by the fact that major rare earth production sites in Kachin are controlled by the Kachin Independence Army, not the junta, and Myanmar lacks the infrastructure for independent processing. This geopolitical maneuvering underscores Myanmar's position as a contested space in the great power competition, with its internal conflicts increasingly intertwined with external strategic interests. The Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) continues to struggle with its Five-Point Consensus, as member states and external powers pursue their own engagements with the junta, effectively undermining ASEAN's unified stance.

EU Relations and Implications

Myanmar's relations with the European Union during this period were marked by diplomatic friction, despite the EU's previously assessed "Stable" relationship outlook as of August 2026. A significant incident occurred on November 10, when Myanmar's Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs summoned the German Chargé d'Affaires in Yangon. The summons was a direct response to a video released by the German Embassy on November 8, which Myanmar's government condemned as a "grave insult" to its Head of State and an "unacceptable interference" in its domestic jurisdiction, warning against any recurrence of such acts. This event highlights the ongoing tension between the EU's democratic values and human rights concerns, and the military junta's assertion of sovereignty and control.

While no new EU sanctions were reported during this specific week, the European Union had imposed sanctions on Myanmar's military in October 2026, including asset freezes and travel restrictions. These measures, alongside the diplomatic incident with Germany, indicate a strained relationship. The security and cyber developments in Myanmar have direct implications for EU interests and EU-funded cooperation projects. The intensified conflict and widespread human rights abuses pose significant risks to humanitarian aid efforts (EU Humanitarian projects: 2) and development cooperation (EU Development Cooperation projects: 2). The internet shutdowns, in particular, could severely impede the effectiveness of EU digital projects like SCOPE Digital – Copernicus Earth Observation Southeast Asia, which relies on digital connectivity for its operations. Furthermore, the overall instability and the junta's repressive actions create an unfavorable environment for trade and investment (EU Trade & Investment projects: 2) and infrastructure projects (EU Infrastructure & Transport projects: 3), making it challenging for the EU to pursue its cooperation objectives effectively.

Military and Defense Analysis

During the reporting period, Myanmar's military, known as the Tatmadaw, demonstrated an intensified operational tempo and a strategic focus on regaining control of territories held by resistance forces. The military launched major "counter-terrorism operations" from Theinzayat along the mountainous route through Mon State's Kyaikhto and Bago's Shwegyin townships, successfully seizing 11 resistance bases, including the National Unity Government (NUG)'s Special Region Military Command and four temporary posts of the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) between November 4 and 8. This operation involved an estimated 1,000 troops and resulted in the capture of significant quantities of small arms, ammunition, drones, and equipment used for manufacturing explosives.

The Tatmadaw's modernization programs continue, evidenced by the deployment of FPV (First-Person View) attack drones against resistance forces south of Myawaddy in Karen State, starting around November 7. This shift in tactics, following heavy infantry losses and warnings from Thailand about stray artillery, indicates an adaptation to battlefield realities and an increasing reliance on advanced, precision-strike capabilities. Aerial resupply drops near the Kyawwarbo mountain range and Lay Kay Kaw waterfall further support isolated positions with food, ammunition, and drone equipment.

Defense spending trends show a significant increase, with military expenditure rising to $5011.30 USD Million in 2024 from $2493.50 USD Million in 2023. In 2026, Myanmar is estimated to spend 4.5% of its GDP on its military. This substantial allocation underscores the junta's commitment to its military campaign despite facing a record budget deficit of over 11 trillion kyats and plans to borrow heavily from the Central Bank. The military's financial situation is strained by escalating conflict and international economic sanctions, yet defense spending remains the largest share of government expenditure. Myanmar also maintains a strong military cooperation pact with Russia, signed in February 2026 and planned to last until 2030, which has been crucial for the junta's access to weapons, jets, and drones.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): The immediate outlook for Myanmar suggests a continuation of intense internal conflict, with the military junta likely to maintain its aggressive posture against resistance forces. The recent success in capturing key resistance bases in Mon State and Bago Region indicates a renewed push to consolidate control over strategic areas. Civilian casualties from airstrikes are expected to remain high, particularly in regions where resistance is strong, such as Rakhine, Kayah, and Sagaing. Diplomatic maneuvering by the junta to secure international legitimacy and economic support, particularly from the US for rare earth investments, will likely continue, potentially leading to further shifts in international relations. Cross-border tensions, especially with Thailand, will remain a concern, with the potential for further spillover incidents.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: Key flashpoints include the ongoing conflict zones in Rakhine State (Mrauk-U, Kyauktaw, Kyaukpyu, Pauktaw), Kayah State (Loikaw), and Sagaing Region (Nyaung Pin Lay, Kani Township), where military airstrikes and ground offensives are concentrated. The Mon State and Bago Region border will remain a critical area as the military seeks to secure its recent gains and prevent resistance regrouping. The Myawaddy area in Karen State is another flashpoint, given the junta's deployment of FPV drones and the proximity to the Thai border. The China-Myanmar Economic Corridor and rare earth mining regions, particularly in Kachin State, will continue to be areas of geopolitical competition and potential instability.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and intensity of military airstrikes and ground offensives, particularly their impact on civilian populations and infrastructure. The effectiveness of resistance counter-offensives and their ability to regroup after setbacks will be crucial. Further diplomatic shifts by major powers (US, China, Russia, EU) and their implications for sanctions, aid, and investment should be closely watched. The status of internet access and communication blackouts in conflict areas will be a critical indicator of humanitarian conditions and the junta's control. Any further cross-border incidents or changes in border policies by neighboring countries will also be important. The upcoming International Court of Justice judgment on November 19 regarding alleged genocide against the Rohingya will be a significant event with potential diplomatic repercussions.

Strategic recommendations: Given the complex and volatile situation, it is recommended that international actors prioritize humanitarian assistance and advocate for the protection of civilians, including pressuring the junta to cease targeting civilian infrastructure and restore internet access. Diplomatic efforts should focus on a coordinated approach that addresses both the internal conflict and the broader geopolitical competition for resources, ensuring that engagement does not inadvertently legitimize the military regime or undermine democratic aspirations. Support for regional mechanisms, such as ASEAN's Five-Point Consensus, should be strengthened, while acknowledging the need for more effective implementation. For the EU, a firm but nuanced diplomatic stance is required, balancing human rights concerns with the need to maintain channels for humanitarian aid and support for civil society, while carefully assessing the implications of security developments on its cooperation projects.
