Executive Summary

The Philippines experienced a dynamic security landscape from October 30 to November 06, 2026, marked by heightened maritime tensions in the South China Sea and significant domestic security preparations. Diplomatic efforts with China saw both confrontation and attempts at de-escalation, while military exercises with allies underscored Manila's commitment to regional security. Internally, nationwide security operations for the "Undas" holiday period were largely successful, though a major cyberattack on a government agency highlighted persistent digital threats. The period reinforced the Philippines' strategic pivot towards strengthening alliances and modernizing its defense capabilities amidst complex geopolitical challenges.

Key Security Developments

- Maritime Tensions in the South China Sea

The Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) reported monitoring 80 Chinese vessels in the West Philippine Sea (WPS) throughout October 2026, a decrease from 101 in September, but still indicating a significant presence. These vessels included People's Liberation Army Navy (PLAN) and China Coast Guard (CCG) ships around key features like Ayungin Shoal (Second Thomas Shoal), Bajo de Masinloc (Scarborough Shoal), Escoda Shoal, and Pag-asa Islands. This sustained presence continues to challenge Philippine sovereignty and maritime rights in its exclusive economic zone.

- Diplomatic Engagement with China Amidst Tensions

On November 3, 2026, Philippine Foreign Affairs Secretary Maria Theresa Lazaro and Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi held a telephone conversation, agreeing to maintain diplomatic dialogue and manage differences peacefully. This exchange followed weeks of sharp rhetoric, including controversial remarks by the Chinese Ambassador suggesting China could "easily win" a conflict with the Philippines, which led to Manila summoning the ambassador in October. The diplomatic engagement aims to de-escalate tensions ahead of the upcoming ASEAN Summit in Manila.

- "Kamandag 7" Military Exercise with Allies

The "Kamandag 7" exercise, involving approximately 950 members of the Armed Forces of the Philippines and 850 U.S. Marines, along with participants from the Japanese Ground Self-Defense Force and Republic of Korea Marines, and observers from the United Kingdom, is scheduled from November 9 to 20, 2026. While the main exercise falls outside the reporting period, preparations and ongoing discussions about its objectives, focusing on amphibious operations, coastal defense, and humanitarian aid, were relevant. This annual exercise underscores the Philippines' commitment to enhancing interoperability with its allies for regional security.

- Nationwide Security for "Undas" Holiday

The Philippine National Police (PNP) and the Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) were on heightened alert from October 30 to November 2, 2026, for the observance of All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day ("Undas"). Over 140,000 personnel from various agencies were deployed nationwide to secure cemeteries, transportation hubs, and tourist spots. The PCG alone monitored over 672,000 sea passengers nationwide from October 29 to October 31, inspecting hundreds of vessels to ensure maritime safety. These extensive operations successfully ensured a peaceful holiday period with no significant incidents reported in areas like Marinduque.

- Major Cybersecurity Breach on Government Agency

On November 4, 2026, it was reported that an unknown threat actor exfiltrated nearly 69GB of sensitive information from the Philippine Overseas Employment Administration (POEA). The breach, which occurred during a 24-minute window, compromised records related to migrant workers, contracts, and financial data. While the attackers' identity remains unconfirmed, Chinese language fragments were found in third-party code, though no direct attribution to a nation-state or criminal group has been made. This incident highlights significant vulnerabilities in government digital infrastructure.

- Cybersecurity Policy and Threat Landscape

The Philippines has moved to keep a cyber disruption playbook in force as authorities confront attacks combining technical intrusion with information manipulation, as reported on November 5, 2026. The National Cybersecurity Inter-Agency Committee approved a resolution to continue implementing this playbook, which outlines steps to detect, contain, and disrupt cyber threats, including strengthening government Domain Name System (DNS) security and taking down fraudulent websites. This proactive stance comes as cyberattacks in the Philippines surged in the first half of 2026, with ransomware claims more than doubling and a rise in AI-powered scams targeting organizations.

- Defense Industry Development and Alliance Integration

Discussions continued regarding an initiative to transform the Philippines into a defense manufacturing hub for the Indo-Pacific, enhancing Manila's domestic defense capabilities and supporting sovereignty. This initiative, rooted in the 1951 Philippines-U.S. Mutual Defense Treaty, aims to foster industrial partnership and structured technology transfer, particularly in areas like precision engineering and advanced electronics. This aligns with the "Self-Reliant Defense Posture Revitalization Act" adopted in 2024.

- Internal Security Operations and Counter-Terrorism

While no major counter-terrorism operations were specifically reported within this week, the broader context of the Philippines' ongoing efforts against groups like Abu Sayyaf remains relevant. The Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) resurfaced in 2026, claiming an ambush that killed four soldiers in January, after being largely dismantled in 2024. The government continues to work on peace and development initiatives in former ASG strongholds to prevent radicalization and strengthen security.

- Tourist Security Incidents

The National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO) ordered tighter monitoring in tourist areas following separate incidents involving foreign visitors in Parañaque and Manila, reported on November 5, 2026. A South Korean national was robbed in Parañaque on October 31, and five suspected members of the "Ativan Gang" were arrested in Intramuros on November 1 after allegedly stealing a Chinese tourist's wallet. These incidents highlight the need for enhanced security measures in popular tourist destinations.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

The recent security developments in the Philippines significantly impact regional stability, particularly in the context of the South China Sea. The continued presence of Chinese vessels in the West Philippine Sea and the diplomatic exchanges, including a phone call between foreign ministers on November 3, 2026, underscore the persistent tensions and the Philippines' resolve to assert its sovereign rights. This dynamic places the Philippines at the forefront of regional maritime disputes, influencing the broader strategic landscape of the Indo-Pacific.

The Philippines' deepening alliance with the United States and other partners like Japan, Australia, and South Korea, as evidenced by ongoing military exercises such as "Kamandag 7," serves as a crucial counterweight to China's assertive actions. These multilateral engagements enhance interoperability and collective defense capabilities, signaling a united front against challenges to a "Free and Open Indo-Pacific." The discussions around transforming the Philippines into a defense manufacturing hub further integrate it into a broader regional security architecture, reducing reliance on external supply chains and boosting its strategic importance.

The diplomatic efforts to manage tensions with China, while asserting territorial claims, reflect a complex foreign policy balancing act. The upcoming ASEAN Summit in Manila provides a critical platform for the Philippines to engage both regional partners and major powers, shaping discussions on a South China Sea Code of Conduct and broader regional security frameworks. The Philippines' role as ASEAN chair in 2026, with aspirations to complete a legally binding Code of Conduct, highlights its proactive stance in regional diplomacy.

Military and Defense Analysis

The Philippines' military and defense posture during this period is characterized by a clear focus on maritime domain awareness and interoperability with allies. The sustained monitoring of Chinese vessels in the West Philippine Sea by the AFP demonstrates an active assertion of territorial claims and a commitment to understanding the operational environment. This vigilance is complemented by ongoing defense modernization programs, such as the "Re-Horizon 3" program, which prioritizes air defense systems and naval assets to bolster the country's capabilities amidst rising regional tensions.

Joint military exercises, like the upcoming "Kamandag 7" with the United States, Japan, and South Korea, are central to the Philippines' strategy to enhance its force posture. These exercises are not merely symbolic; they involve practical training in amphibious operations, coastal defense, and humanitarian aid, directly contributing to capability development and readiness. The emphasis on interoperability ensures that the Philippine military can effectively operate alongside its allies, leveraging shared doctrine and planning for a more robust collective defense.

Defense spending trends indicate a commitment to long-term procurement and modernization. The initiative to establish the Philippines as a defense manufacturing hub, supported by the "Self-Reliant Defense Posture Revitalization Act," signifies a strategic shift towards greater self-sufficiency and industrial development within the defense sector. This move aims to not only equip the Armed Forces with modern assets but also to stimulate economic growth and create skilled jobs, aligning defense policy with national development goals.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): In the immediate future, maritime tensions in the South China Sea are likely to persist, with continued Chinese presence and potential for further incidents, particularly around disputed features like Second Thomas Shoal and Scarborough Shoal. Diplomatic efforts between the Philippines and China will continue, with the upcoming ASEAN Summit in Manila (November 16-18, 2026) serving as a critical venue for high-level discussions and potential de-escalation or further confrontation. The "Kamandag 7" exercise, scheduled from November 9-20, 2026, will be a significant event, showcasing enhanced interoperability with allies and potentially drawing reactions from China. Domestically, post-Undas security operations will transition into preparations for the ASEAN Summit, with heightened security protocols around airports and maritime routes. Cybersecurity threats, particularly from state-sponsored actors and ransomware groups, will remain elevated, necessitating continued vigilance and implementation of the cyber disruption playbook.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: The West Philippine Sea, particularly around Second Thomas Shoal (Ayungin Shoal) and Scarborough Shoal (Bajo de Masinloc), remains the primary flashpoint due to overlapping territorial claims and frequent encounters between Philippine and Chinese vessels. Any miscalculation or aggressive maneuver in these areas could quickly escalate. Critical infrastructure and government digital systems are also high-risk areas, as demonstrated by the recent POEA data breach and the ongoing threat of sophisticated cyberattacks. The southern Philippines, while experiencing a reduction in major incidents, still faces residual threats from Abu Sayyaf Group remnants and other local extremist elements, requiring continuous counter-terrorism efforts.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and nature of Chinese maritime activities in the West Philippine Sea, particularly any attempts to impede Philippine resupply missions or patrols. The outcomes of diplomatic engagements with China, especially regarding the Code of Conduct in the South China Sea, will be crucial. The scope and participation in joint military exercises with allies will signal the strength of alliances and collective defense posture. Domestically, the effectiveness of cybersecurity defenses against ongoing threats and the stability of internal security operations in Mindanao will be important to observe.

Strategic recommendations: The Philippines should continue to strengthen its alliances with the US, Japan, Australia, and other like-minded partners through regular joint exercises, intelligence sharing, and defense acquisitions to enhance its deterrence capabilities in the South China Sea. Simultaneously, Manila should maintain open diplomatic channels with Beijing to de-escalate tensions and pursue a legally binding Code of Conduct, while firmly asserting its sovereign rights based on international law. Internally, there is an urgent need to invest significantly in cybersecurity infrastructure and capabilities, particularly for government agencies and critical infrastructure, to counter sophisticated cyber threats. Continued socio-economic development and peace-building initiatives in Mindanao are essential to address the root causes of insurgency and prevent the resurgence of extremist groups. Finally, enhancing maritime law enforcement capabilities and presence in its exclusive economic zone will be vital for effective border security and resource protection.

• LTFRB extends application period for TNVS regularization (2026-11-06 04:44)

MANILA, Philippines — The Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board (LTFRB) has extended the application period for the regularization of ride-hailing partners operating under temporary or "tempo" status.Upon the directive of Transportation Secretary Vince Dizon, acting LTFRB chairman Greg Pua Jr. said that the online application window for temporary Transport Network Vehicle Service (TNVS) operators, which opened on October 8 for an initial 30 working days, will run for another 30 days. The extension is meant to ensure that no one will be left behind in the government's push to provide a decent source of income for workers in the public transportation sector, Pua said.The Manila Times was told that the regularization initiative was expected to benefit thousands of TNVS partners, following discrepancies the LTFRB uncovered in the platforms of some Transport Network Companies (TNCs)."Tempo" refers to the practice of TNCs of onboarding TNVS units onto their digital platforms without the units first securing the required authority from the LTFRB. The practice violates the agency's rules, as it allows TNVS units to serve the riding public despite the absence of a valid franchise, according to the bureau."Our regularization move is aimed at helping thousands of TNVS drivers whose only fault was that they relied in good faith on their onboarding and assumed substantial financial commitments in the process," Pua said.He added that the measure was also in compliance with President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.'s directive to enforce fair rules and regulations while looking after the welfare of the public transport sector.Based on its latest data, the LTFRB has received 13,216 applications, of which 5,091 have already been issued a Provisional Authority (PA). Pua said the agency is now fast-tracking the processing of the remaining applications."We ask our partners in the TNVS community who are applying for regularization to follow the application process. The requirements are intended to prevent application cancellations due to challenges that include questions on vehicle ownership," he said.

• Prosecutors seek ICC protection for 55 witnesses vs Duterte (2026-11-06 00:50)

MANILA, Philippines — International Criminal Court (ICC) prosecutors have cited security risks in the Philippines, reported security incidents involving witnesses and the continuing influence of former president Rodrigo Duterte's allies in seeking protective measures for 55 witnesses expected to testify in his trial.In a public redacted filing made Nov. 5, prosecutors told Trial Chamber III that the measures were necessary to protect witnesses whose testimony concerns alleged extrajudicial killings during Duterte's terms as Davao City mayor and president.The prosecution said numerous witnesses have reported security incidents, while some had made their cooperation conditional on being granted anonymity.It argued that direct threats were not necessary to establish an objectively justifiable risk to witnesses, citing previous ICC rulings that recognized the security situation in a particular territory as a relevant consideration when assessed alongside a witness's individual circumstances.The filing identifies six categories of witnesses requiring protection: insider witnesses residing in the Philippines, witnesses from the alleged crime scenes also residing in the country, witnesses whose specific circumstances were redacted, witnesses living abroad, individuals admitted into the ICC protection program, and prosecution staff members.Particularly concerning, prosecutors said, are insider witnesses whose accounts relate to alleged extrajudicial killings during Duterte's mayoral and presidential administrations and, in some cases, directly implicate the former president.Their testimony could also implicate former Philippine National Police chief and incumbent Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, whom prosecutors described as having sufficient influence and support in the Philippines to evade arrest despite an ICC warrant that has been public for five months.Dela Rosa remains at large.Prosecutors are seeking three categories of protective and special measures: the use of pseudonyms and face and voice distortion to conceal witness identities from the public; closed or private court sessions for sensitive portions of testimony; and psychological support for witnesses considered vulnerable.Duterte’s trial will start on November 30.

be especially affected by the consequences of drought," he said.Advincula encouraged priests, catechists, religious educators, and people involved in faith formation to "take this opportunity to deepen the faithful's understanding of our Christian responsibility to care for creation."He urged them to "help our communities recognize that the natural world is not merely a resource to be consumed, but a precious gift entrusted by the Creator to our care and stewardship.""In particular, water is essential to all life and must never be taken for granted. We must cultivate habits of conservation, responsible consumption, and concern for the common good," he said."Let our prayers move us to concrete action. As we ask God to send us rain, may we also become more faithful stewards of His creation, mindful that caring for our common home is an essential expression of our love for God and our neighbors," Advincula said.On Wednesday, the Department of Science and Technology-Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (DoST-Pagasa) said that a very strong El Niño is "present in the tropical Pacific and is expected to persist until the first half of 2027, potentially reaching its peak by the end of 2026."The DoST-Pagasa strongly advised the public and concerned agencies to " implement appropriate sectoral interventions, conservation and mitigation measures, particularly water conservation and efficient management of water resources, to minimize the potential impacts of El Niño."

- VP’s defense team to call 24 witnesses (2026-11-05 16:19)

VICE President Sara Duterte’s defense team has named 24 witnesses for the first week of its presentation of evidence in her impeachment trial, following the withdrawal of its initial witness, constitutional law professor Dean Ralph Sarmiento.The list was contained in a Nov. 4 manifestation with a request for subpoenas filed by Duterte’s lawyers before the Senate impeachment court, according to a copy of the document provided by the prosecution.Defense counsel Michael Wesley Poa confirmed on Thursday that the defense had submitted its witness list. “We respect Dean Sarmiento’s personal decision and appreciate his initial consideration of our invitation. We wish him well in his continued contributions to constitutional discourse,” Poa said.He added that the defense understood Sarmiento’s decision, but declined to disclose the contents of its court submissions. “Consistent with our disposition since pretrial, we will refrain from disclosing the contents of our court submissions and filings,” Poa said.The 24 witnesses named in the manifestation are Suzette Balucanag-Punay, corporate counsel of GenCorp Industries Inc. and Metro City Chow Foods Corp.; Jaime Adalin, Davao City assessor; John Kenneth Enumerables, Island Garden City of Samal assessor; Vingelin Bajan, Davao City accountant; Cindy Colina, Matina Crossing barangay chairman; Olivia Barcarse, BDO Unibank first vice president; Alvin Go, BDO legal service group head; Paul Roderick Ysmael, Bank of the Philippine Islands senior vice president; Cesar Bernard Coloma, BPI vice president and head of litigation; Marino Buban Jr., EastWest Bank first vice president and head of legal service division; Joselito Vallada, Land Bank of the Philippines senior vice president; Janella Marie Panlilio, Metropolitan Bank & Trust Co. legal and remedial services group head; Jose Manuel Jr., Philippine Savings Bank head of legal services division; Rodel Mediavillo, PSBank branch review and control unit head; May Ann Candaroma-Morales, PSBank loan securities department head;

Joseph Anthony Lopez, Security Bank head of legal and first vice president; Joselito Banaag, UnionBank of the Philippines corporate secretary and general counsel; Louiemel Panes, UnionBank branch ambassador; Rogelio Villos Jr., UnionBank senior branch ambassador; Jayah Deneserie Scalf, UnionBank branch ambassador; Gemma Lynn Del Mundo, UnionBank senior branch ambassador; Anel Martin Antero; Chadrin Parian; and Vimar Barcellano, Quezon City prosecutor. The witnesses are expected to address various aspects of the defense's efforts to counter Article II of the Articles of Impeachment, which accuses Duterte of unexplained wealth.Balucanag-Punay, Adalin, Enumerables and Bajan are expected to testify on corporate records, property tax declarations and tax maps, as well as Duterte's remuneration during her tenure in Davao City.Colina, meanwhile, is expected to discuss matters concerning Matina Crossing, including its creation, official name and other names by which it is known.Bank representatives will testify on requests made by Duterte and her lawyer, Manases Carpio, through Poa Himala and Virtucio Law, along with the banks' responses and related documents.The manifestation also named Antero, Parian and Barcellano, although it did not specify their expected testimony.Former dean begs offSarmiento, former dean of the College of Law of the University of St. La Salle in Bacolod City, declined to participate as a witness in the impeachment proceedings against Vice President Duterte.In a Facebook post on Thursday, Sarmiento thanked the defense team for recognizing the value of the constitutional and legal views he has been sharing on social media. "I had not anticipated that these views might potentially become part of the impeachment proceedings. After careful consideration, I have decided to decline participation as a witness in the proceedings," he said.He explained that his decision is personal, to preserve the independence of his constitutional law scholarship and the impartiality of his legal views and opinions.Sarmiento added that he has asked the defense team to withdraw their request for a subpoena for his appearance or, if one has already been issued, to seek its recall by the impeachment court.Earlier, in a formal manifestation filed with the court, Duterte's counsel said Sarmiento would testify on legal and constitutional principles relevant to the impeachment case.House lead prosecutor Gerville Luistro on Thursday praised Sarmiento for declining to testify.House prosecutor and Bicol Saro Rep. Terry Ridon on Thursday welcomed Sarmiento's decision, saying his planned testimony on legal and constitutional principles was irrelevant to the remaining charge. "It is only right that Dean Ralph Sarmiento withdrew from appearing at the trial," Ridon said in Filipino. "Presenting evidence from the defense about what they claim to be legal and constitutional principles is misplaced and has no basis: next week's trial is about the defense against the allegations of unexplained wealth against the vice president, nothing else," he added.What the vice president's counsels should focus on, the lawmaker reiterated, is to "explain the P800 million to P1.5 billion in unexplained wealth" supposedly amassed by Duterte and her husband Manases Carpio. "More than P100 million deposited in financial accounts that were not declared in the Vice President's SALN (statement of assets, liabilities and net worth), credit card transactions exceeding P200,000 just for dining out and shopping for shoes, and many more," Ridon said. - Newly developed wells make first gas delivery (2026-11-05 16:17)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. led the first delivery of natural gas from Malampaya's new offshore wells in Batangas City on Thursday.Speaking at the ceremonial first flow of gas from Malampaya's Phase 4 Project (MP4), Marcos said the new wells would help move the Philippines closer to energy independence. "Maximizing the use of Malampaya gas could contribute to more competitive power rates because we are relying less on imported energy sources that are subject to volatile international energy prices," he said.Marcos assured Filipinos that locally sourced energy would ensure stability amid global tensions, since most of the country's energy sources are imported. "What does this mean for every Filipino family? Our own gas, more reliable electricity, a more stable energy supply for our country," he said in Filipino, stressing the urgent necessity of developing domestic resources to guard against geopolitical tensions and supply disruptions. "As our economy grows, so does our demand for energy. Industrialization and energy grow hand in hand; one cannot exist without the other. We cannot fully rely on other countries to provide these resources all of the time," Marcos added.The successful drilling and testing of the Malampaya East-1 and Camago-3 wells earlier in the year uncovered an estimated 222 billion cubic feet of natural gas reserves.By June, both wells were integrated into the existing Malampaya subsea production system, channeling indigenous gas from offshore Palawan through transmission infrastructure directly to gas-fired power plants serving the Luzon grid.The chief executive noted that the Malampaya project forms part of a broader administrative drive to strengthen national energy security. Under the current administration, 14 new petroleum service contracts have been awarded for oil, natural gas and native hydrogen exploration.The achievement marks a significant milestone for the Malampaya consortium and reinforces the project's role in sustaining the Philippines' indigenous natural gas supply. "From offshore Palawan, this indigenous natural gas will flow through the Malampaya gas transmission infrastructure to Batangas, and ultimately to the gas-fired power plants serving the Luzon grid," the president said.He cited the importance of maximizing indigenous natural gas to help manage electricity costs, noting that greater use of Malampaya gas "could contribute to more competitive power rates because we are relying less on imported energy sources that are subject to volatile international energy prices." Prime Infra Chairman Enrique Razon Jr. highlighted Malampaya's enduring contribution to national development and the importance of continued investment in its resources. "For 25 years, Malampaya has demonstrated the value of developing our own energy resources. It has powered millions of Filipino households and businesses, supported economic growth and generated more than $14 billion in government revenues. But Malampaya's resources are finite. Sustaining production requires continued investment and the technical expertise to develop reserves that are increasingly challenging to access. That is what Malampaya Phase 4 (MP4) represents," Razon said.With an investment of close to a billion dollars, MP4 involved drilling two deepwater wells and installing subsea infrastructure to connect them to the existing Malampaya production platform. The project added an estimated 222 billion cubic feet of recoverable natural gas reserves, capable of generating approximately 31.46 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity — enough to power 13.11 million Filipino households for one year.MP4 was completed in 27 months after the final investment decision, five months ahead of its original schedule and five months ahead of the industry benchmark. Additionally, the Department of Energy has introduced special allowances for service contractors targeting frontier areas and gas development, alongside the implementation of the Philippine Gradiometry and Seismic Survey Project.Marcos urged investors to build on the success of this Malampaya Phase 4 Project. “Together, let us shape a Bagong Pilipinas with the foresight to explore, the resolve to develop and the wisdom to manage our resources responsibly for the benefit of generations of Filipinos to come,” he said.

- Tulfo admits he goofed; Romualdez tale untrue (2026-11-05 16:16)

AFTER his statement made headlines, broadcast journalist Ramon Tulfo on Thursday issued a retraction, saying there was no truth to his claim that former speaker Martin Romualdez was sneaking out of jail. “I was fed the wrong report that former speaker Martin Romualdez could go in and out of jail,” Tulfo said in a Facebook post on Thursday admitting that one of the most embarrassing and humiliating experiences as a journalist is spreading wrong information.Tulfo earlier claimed that Romualdez had been sneaking out and returning to the New Quezon City Jail-Male Dormitory through a backdoor arrangement designed to conceal his movements.He even alleged that as per a “tweety bird,” electricity supply was intentionally interrupted to disable closed-circuit television (CCTV) monitoring to allow him to escape through a staircase where an ambulance was waiting for him.This claim prompted an immediate investigation by the Bureau of Jail Management and Penology (BJMP), which found no evidence in CCTV footage dating back to September, of any power interruptions or of Romualdez leaving the facility.The Sandiganbayan Third Division, reacting to Tulfo’s initial report, had summoned two jail officials to testify on Thursday regarding the custody of the former speaker. “No such thing happened when the facts started coming in yesterday. It was fiction. I... goofed. No excuses,” Tulfo said.Even Local Government Secretary Jonvic Remulla said the claims were not true as proven by the CCTV review and even invited journalists to personally observe the lawmaker’s presence and condition at the New Quezon City Jail-Male Dormitory. “It is not true. He does not leave the BJMP, he does not receive visitors outside of the [allowed] areas, he practically receives very few visitors, just his counsel and family,” Remulla said.Remulla said the government is taking such allegations with all seriousness and reiterated that Romualdez receives the same treatment as all persons deprived of liberty in the facility.Romualdez, he said, is still under medical confinement due to a list of illnesses including Type 2 diabetes, hypertension, primary hypothyroidism. The lawmaker has lost a hundred pounds since his medical problems began.Romualdez is facing graft and plunder charges, and is considered a central figure in the flood control bribery scandal.The Romualdez camp welcomed Tulfo’s retraction. “We welcome Mr. Ramon Tulfo’s public acknowledgment that the allegations he circulated concerning former speaker Ferdinand Martin G. Romualdez’s supposed unauthorized movements outside his detention facility were false. Mr. Tulfo has admitted that he was fed incorrect information, failed to independently verify it and subsequently passed it on to the public,” the congressman’s counsel, Ade Fajardo, said in a statement. “He has now described the allegations as fiction. This public retraction is significant, particularly because the allegations had already circulated widely and subjected our client to public suspicion and criticism,” he added.The lawyer also cited the testimony of Jail Supt. Maria Lourdes Pacion, who denied that Romualdez had been allowed to leave the facility without authorization.The retraction followed a Nov. 4 demand letter from Romualdez’s lawyers directing Tulfo to stop circulating the allegations, remove or correct his original post and issue a prominent clarification, while warning of possible legal action.“We appreciate Mr. Tulfo’s willingness to acknowledge his mistake publicly. It takes responsibility to correct an erroneous report, especially after it has gained widespread attention,” Fajardo said.

- Move It appeals P555.7M penalty for ‘ghost riders’ (2026-11-05 16:15)

MOTORCYCLE taxi platform Move It has filed a motion for reconsideration after receiving the Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board’s (LTFRB) preliminary decision imposing a penalty of P555.75 million for overshooting its rider allocation.In a statement, Move It said it had thoroughly reviewed the decision and its implications for the industry, and is engaging with LTFRB through proper processes.“We respect the board’s authority, and we remain committed to working toward a sustainable and adaptive regulatory framework for motorcycle taxis,” the company said.The LTFRB, now under the acting leadership of Greg Pua Jr., slapped Move It with a P555.75-million fine over “ghost riders” that exceeded its authorized allocation.In its Oct. 9 decision, the agency found that Move It had 73,321 active riders on its platform against an authorized allocation of only 17,746 — an excess of 55,575 riders.But in the same statement, Move It clarified its position, describing rider allocation as a dynamic measure of live, on-demand supply.The gig economy is built on flexibility, with riders going online and offline throughout the day based on their own schedules, it noted.“Because of this natural fluidity, maintaining continuous supply for commuters means monitoring the number of riders who are actively online and ready to accept trips at any given moment, especially during peak rush hours,” the company said.Addressing its rider-partners, it reiterated that it would continue to work closely with the LTFRB and other regulators to protect their livelihood.“To commuters, the platform acknowledged how much they rely on its services, especially with the holiday rush approaching, and committed to working with regulators to ensure continued service when needed most,” Move It said.It added that it would await the LTFRB’s review of its motion for reconsideration.Pua said the LTFRB is drafting measures to deal with the issue in relation to the affected riders while ensuring that the online boarding system of ride-hailing services is strictly complying with the government’s regulations.“What the agency is focused on is addressing the plight of the thousands of overboarded riders who invested their own resources to earn a decent living — and whose only fault was that they acted in good faith and trusted that they were allowed to operate under the existing rules and regulations,” he said.

- SKorean firm starts building 3rd Philippine Navy frigate (2026-11-05 16:14)

SOUTH Korean shipbuilder HD Hyundai Heavy Industries has begun construction of the third Miguel Malvar-class frigate for the Philippine Navy, with the company targeting delivery ahead of its contractual schedule.The company held a steel-cutting ceremony on Nov. 4 at its shipyard, marking the start of construction of the first of two additional 3,200-ton frigates ordered by the Philippine government in December 2025.The vessels, which will become the Navy's FFG-8 and FFG-9, are scheduled for delivery in 2029.HD Hyundai said it plans to speed up construction by drawing on its experience in building warships for the Philippine Navy and its expanded production capacity following its merger last year.The two new frigates will retain the basic specifications of the first batch of Miguel Malvar-class vessels, but will have improved weapons and sensor systems.Among the major upgrades is the installation of a Korean Vertical Launching System equipped with LIG Defense and Aerospace's K-SAAM, also known as Haegung, surface-to-air missile system.The new frigates will also be delivered with a towed array sonar system, enhancing their ability to detect and track underwater threats, particularly submarines.The second batch will replace the French-made MBDA VL-MICA air defense system used on the first two frigates with the South Korean K-SAAM system.The change will give the Navy another air defense capability while allowing the vessels to carry multiple surface-to-air missiles in vertical launch cells.The acquisition of the two more frigates is part of the Revised Armed Forces of the Philippines Modernization Program's Re-Horizon 3 phase.The vessels are intended to expand the Navy's modern surface combatant fleet as the Philippines faces growing maritime security challenges, particularly in the West Philippine Sea.HD Hyundai said the new vessels would follow the same basic specifications as the first two, allowing the Navy to streamline crew training, ship operations, spare-parts procurement and maintenance.The latest contract represents the fourth shipbuilding project of the company for the Philippine Navy.It built two Jose Rizal-class frigates, two Miguel Malvar-class frigates and six offshore patrol vessels for the Navy.With the two additional frigates, the company's total orders from the Philippine Navy will reach 12 ships.The Jose Rizal-class vessels, the Jose Rizal and the Antonio Luna were the Navy's first modern guided-missile frigates and represent a significant upgrade in the service's surface warfare capabilities.The Miguel Malvar-class frigates, the Miguel Malvar and the Diego Silang further strengthened the Navy's capabilities with modern combat management systems, advanced sensors and weapons.The Navy's projected force structure also includes four Rajah Sulayman-class corvettes, three Del Pilar-class offshore patrol vessels, one Conrado Yap-class corvette, three Jacinto-class patrol vessels, four Tarlac-class landing platform docks, two Bacolod City-class logistics support vessels, five Ivatan-class vessels, nine Acero-class fast attack interdiction craft, three Cyclone-class patrol ships and multiple Multi-Purpose Attack Craft.

- 'Leave no room for corruption' (2026-11-05 16:13)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. on Thursday urged local chief executives to leave "no room for corruption" in the use of the government's disaster rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance program (DRRAP) funds for local government units (LGUs).In his keynote speech at the ceremonial turnover of the funds held in Malacañang, Marcos said the P8.6 billion distributed to 306 LGUs must be strictly used for disaster rehabilitation, drawing a firm red line against anomalies in public works."This is the people's money, intended for our fellow citizens who have been devastated by disaster. It is not a fund for profit-making, nor is it for anyone looking to enrich themselves amidst the tragedies we are experiencing," Marcos said in Filipino."There must be no room for corruption in this program. Ghost projects are prohibited. Commissions are prohibited. Substandard rehabilitation projects are prohibited,” he added, urging local chief executives to use the funds wisely.The funds were earmarked for critical rebuilding efforts, including shelter and resettlement, infrastructure such as roads, bridges, and public buildings, education and health services, agricultural and fisheries recovery, and social protection programs.The president warned that anyone trying to profit from public tragedies will face the law.Marcos said that funds were distributed based on community needs, devoid of political considerations. “It is with trust that we hand it to you based on need — no political color considered,” he said.Drawing from his past experience as a governor, Marcos underscored that LGUs are best positioned to understand the realities on the ground.The chief executive noted that the first batch exceeding P6 billion has already been released, while a second batch amounting to over P2.5 billion has been approved for immediate downloading to local governments.To ensure rapid response, the administration has streamlined bureaucratic procedures. While interventions through the National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Fund previously took eight to 11 months, the revised process cuts delivery time down to four to six months.However, he reminded local leaders to improve their capacity to document and report disaster impacts promptly to the Office of Civil Defense and the NDRRMC to facilitate national assistance.

- PH among countries with highest teen inactivity – WHO (2026-11-05 16:12)

ABOUT 40 percent of adolescents in the Philippines reported having no physically activity in a week, placing the country among those with the highest rates of inactivity among young people, according to country estimates from the World Health Organization (WHO).WHO said in a study that 40 percent of adolescents in the Philippines, Namibia and Nepal reported no active days, not even an hour of exercise a week.The study, published in The Lancet Global Health, draws on hundreds of population-based surveys from 140 countries and territories, involving more than 3.2 million teens, WHO said.In its global estimates released Wednesday, WHO found that one in four adolescents aged 11 to 17 worldwide reported no active days in the previous week, meaning they did not complete at least 60 minutes of moderate to vigorous physical activity on any day.The findings translate to about 240 million young people worldwide who reported no physically activity days in a week, WHO said.Adolescents in the study reported being physically active for an average of 2.7 days a week, while only 14 percent were active on all seven days.WHO also found a gender gap in physical activity, with 28 percent of girls reporting no active days, compared with 22 percent of boys.Only 11 percent of girls reported being physically active every day, compared with 17 percent of boys.WHO warned that physical inactivity is a major risk factor for heart disease, type 2 diabetes and some cancers. “Helping young people develop active habits early in life is critical to protecting their health and reducing the global burden of these diseases,” the agency said.WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said the world had made almost no progress in getting young people to become physically active over the past 15 years, with girls being left furthest behind. “The answer is not to tell adolescents to try harder. It is to build schools, streets and communities where moving, playing and being active is safe, easy and normal," he added.WHO said physical activity was shaped by where adolescents live, study, travel and spend their free time. Transport patterns, access to safe public spaces, opportunities for walking and cycling, school environments, affordability, social norms and screen-based lifestyles can all influence their opportunities to be active.The agency called for stronger action across education, transport, urban planning, sport and health, including policies that make physical activity an easy, safe and accessible part of everyday life.

- Gatchalian to LGUs: Fortify reading gains (2026-11-05 16:11)

SENATE President Sherwin Gatchalian urged local government units (LGUs) to fortify reading gains and dismantle basic and functional illiteracy as the country observes National Reading Month in November.Gatchalian said that while the Philippines showed a welcome improvement in reading ability as reflected by its performance in the latest Program for International Student Assessment, deeply rooted systemic deficiencies remain a pressing concern. He added that approximately seven out of 10 Filipino learners aged 15 continue to score below the minimum global standards for reading proficiency.Gatchalian stressed the necessity of embedding localized grassroots interventions alongside national standard programs, such as the Department of Education's Academic Recovery and Accessible Learning initiative.A centerpiece of this legislative push is the proposed National Literacy Council Act, which aims to legally institutionalize the participation of municipalities, cities, and provinces. Under the measure, Gatchalian proposes designating local school boards as de facto local literacy councils. This structural change would legally mandate local governments to formulate localized, data-driven roadmaps to eliminate illiteracy, backed by clear, measurable performance indicators. "In our efforts to improve literacy and the reading proficiency of our students, the role of our LGUs is crucial, especially since they have a better understanding of the challenges and needs of the students within their jurisdictions," Gatchalian said.The proposed localized roadmaps are designed to sync with the country's Community-Based Monitoring System Act and the Alternative Learning System, ensuring that resources are directly funneled to areas suffering from acute learning poverty.

- LTO revokes licenses of taxi drivers in 'gas-and-run' case (2026-11-05 16:10)

THE Land Transportation Office (LTO) has revoked the licenses of two taxi drivers involved in a gas-and-run racket, a form of theft where a motorist pulls up to a gas station, has their vehicle's fuel tank filled by an attendant, and then drives off without paying. "It is wrong to flee after fueling up without paying. We know gas is expensive today, but that is no reason to evade payment. Workers struggle for every peso they earn, so it is unjust for them to be the ones to lose out because of such an act," LTO chief Markus Lacanilao said, noting the two were barred from securing a new license for the next two years.Lacanilao said a driver is expected not only to practice road safety but to pay his obligations as well. "This is why the LTO acts swiftly on such incidents to ensure that those proven to have violated the rules are held accountable. We do not condone such behavior and will not allow the responsibility of every motorist to be ignored or the aggrieved to be neglected," he added.

- Malabon pushes information literacy (2026-11-05 16:09)

MALABON Mayor Jeannie Sandoval said Thursday the city would embed media and information literacy (MIL) into local governance.During her talk at the MIL Cities Central Hybrid event on Nov. 3, 2026, Sandoval cited four pillars of implementation: institutionalization, access to information, citizens' engagement and action, and knowledge and information sharing.The virtual event was organized for the observance of Global Media and Information Literacy Week and World Cities Day by Al Rayyan, Qatar, Dubrovnik, Croatia, and Unesco.Sandoval said Malabon has been an MIL pilot city since 2025.City Administrator Alex Rosete said MIL has been woven into regular city programs since Sept. 15."Media and information literacy is not simply about providing information; it is about ensuring that our citizens can understand, evaluate, and use it responsibly," Rosete said.

- NAIA passenger volume tops 1.29M (2026-11-05 16:08)

PASSENGER volume at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) hit 1.29 million during the nine-day holiday rush from Oct. 27 to Nov. 4, 2026, beating initial forecasts and marking a 4.4-percent increase compared to last year.The New NAIA Infra Corp. (NNIC) reported that actual volume reached 1,291,885 passengers, compared to 1,237,475 during the same period in 2025. This was 3.4-percent higher than the operator's conservative projection of 1.25 million, which had initially anticipated a modest 1-percent growth.International passenger traffic rose 3.94 percent to 649,691 from 625,056 a year earlier, while domestic traffic grew 4.86 percent to 642,194 from 612,419. Oct. 30 proved to be the busiest day, handling 153,901 passengers and exceeding the daily projection of 149,216.To prepare for the holiday surge, NNIC partnered closely with airlines, ground handlers, transport providers and key government offices — including the Department of Transportation, Manila International Airport Authority, and the bureaus of Immigration, Customs, and Quarantine.Operational adjustments included round-the-clock monitoring via a 24-hour Command Center at Terminal 2 to coordinate incident response. NNIC also deployed extra personnel to screening checkpoints and immigration counters, increased security patrols, and established Public Assistance Desks across Terminals 1, 2 and 3.Traffic management teams synchronized with road authorities to regulate vehicle flow around the airport, while inter-terminal shuttles facilitated smoother passenger transfers.According to the operator, these measures are part of an ongoing effort to improve passenger processing, terminal access and facility management as NAIA adapts to growing travel demands.

- No tax hikes for businesses in Manila – Moreno (2026-11-05 16:07)

MANILA Mayor Francisco "Isko Moreno" Domagoso said Thursday that business tax will not be increased to keep the cost of doing business in the city low.He cited the Minimum Basic Needs platform, which aims to create more business opportunities and predictable rules for businesses. “When you pay one peso, you get one peso receipt,” Moreno said during a courtesy call by representatives of the American Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines (AmCham) at Manila City Hall.Moreno informed the delegation of measures to ease doing business in Manila, including the reduction of zoning requirements from 22 to seven. “You are always welcome to do business in Manila. It is inexpensive to do business in Manila. We will not raise taxes,” Moreno said.AmCham Philippines Executive Director Ebb Hinchliffe said the meeting exceeded their expectations. “This is already more than we expected today. To meet with the mayor is always an honor and a privilege, and what we were looking for is to learn more about why American investors or other foreign investors should come and invest in the city of Manila,” Hinchliffe said. “Mission accomplished. He very clearly outlined the reasons that Manila is open for business, and I can now go back and very confidently recommend the city,” he added.AmCham Philippines has more than 900 members across the country, representing American and multinational companies.

- Authorities raid illegal Caloocan lotto outlet (2026-11-05 16:05)

THE Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office (PCSO) and the National Bureau of Investigation raided a lotto outlet on Camarin Road, Caloocan City, on Wednesday for allegedly running an illegal numbers game. “The PCSO maintains a strict zero-tolerance policy for illegal gambling and fraudulent operations,” PCSO General Manager Mel Robles said. “Every peso spent on legitimate PCSO games goes directly toward funding essential health programs, medical assistance, and charitable services for Filipinos nationwide. Operations that issue unauthorized tickets actively deprive our countrymen of these vital benefits,” he added.Seized during the operation was bet money estimated at P5,000, one fake ticket, a mobile phone used for point-of-sale operations, and gaming hardware and paraphernalia.

- Economic dependence on China seen to threaten PH sovereignty (2026-11-05 16:04)

ECONOMIC dependence on China could constrain the Philippines’ ability to defend its sovereignty and make independent policy decisions, a civil society group warned on Thursday.Democracy Watch co-convenor Lloyd Zaragoza urged Manila to strengthen domestic industries rather than compromise its national interests for economic opportunities.The country’s mounting diplomatic tensions with Beijing should serve as a wake-up call for the Philippines to build a stronger and more self-reliant economy, Zaragoza said in a statement. “The Philippines should not have to choose between protecting its economic interests and defending its sovereignty,” he said in response to a joint appeal by business and sectoral groups for Manila and Beijing to ease diplomatic tensions. “The Philippines should pursue economic partnerships that strengthen our national capacity, not create dependencies that compromise our democratic independence. A strong economic partner should make the Philippines stronger, not more dependent,” he said.Zaragoza pointed to the country’s significant trade imbalance with China, noting that the Philippines imports substantially more goods from the country than it exports to its market.He questioned if such a relationship was generating sufficient benefits for domestic industries, employment and the country’s long-term economic development.The group’s position came after 22 business organizations, led by the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, urged both countries to ease diplomatic tensions, warning that a prolonged standoff could have serious economic consequences for the Philippines.Zaragoza also cited figures showing that China’s net share in Philippine foreign direct investments (FDIs) fell by more than 75 percent, from $13 million in 2024 to $3.2 million in 2025, accounting for 0.2 percent of the country’s total FDIs.He said a genuinely beneficial economic partner should bring substantial investments that create opportunities for Filipinos without forcing the Philippines to choose between economic security and independence. “Economic dependence can become a vulnerability to our democracy. When our economy is overly reliant on external markets and supply chains, our ability to make independent policy decisions and stand firm on matters of national interest can be constrained by economic pressures,” Zaragoza said.He added that the country’s sovereignty and democratic institutions should never become bargaining chips in pursuing economic opportunities.

- Cayetano calls for equitable distribution of classroom funds (2026-11-05 16:03)

SAYING that 30 of the poorest municipalities receive no funding for additional classrooms, Sen. Pia Cayetano on Thursday called for a more equitable distribution of classroom construction funds. “Many communities across the country still lack enough classrooms. But the need is not the same everywhere. Some areas have much bigger shortages than others,” Cayetano said in a statement. “Since government resources are limited, we must make sure that classrooms are built where they are needed most,” she said.Citing data from the Second Congressional Commission on Education (EdCom 2), Cayetano said that more than half of the local government units (LGUs) with the most severe classroom shortages did not receive funding for additional classrooms under the 2026 national budget.She said while nine out of 10 first-class LGUs received funding, only about half of fifth-class LGUs were allocated funds.Thirty of these poorer municipalities, despite having a combined requirement of 356 classrooms, received no funding at all.Cayetano said classroom shortages are not limited to poor and remote communities, since urban schools are also struggling to accommodate growing student populations.She noted that many schools have resorted to holding two to three class shifts daily to accommodate learners.She also cited United Nations projections that two-thirds of the world’s population will be living in urban areas by 2050, pointing to the need to prepare for the growing demand for school facilities as more people move to cities. “And as more people move to cities, the need for classrooms will continue to grow,” Cayetano said.As the Senate reviews the proposed 2027 national budget, Cayetano said lawmakers would take a closer look at how classroom construction funds are distributed.She stressed the need for updated and reliable data on classroom requirements, projected student enrollment and communities expected to experience increased demand for school facilities in the coming years.Cayetano also emphasized that budget planning must look beyond existing shortages and anticipate the future needs of schools and communities. “We must also think beyond today’s shortages. Our budget planning should consider what our schools and communities will need in the future,” she said.Cayetano said access to decent learning facilities should not depend on where a child lives or goes to school. “Our goal must be clear: no child should be left behind because of where they live or go to school,” she said.

- Senators push zero tariffs on PH heated tobacco, agri exports (2026-11-05 16:02)

IN a major push to expand market access for Philippine exports, senators are seeking the total elimination of Japanese tariffs on locally manufactured heated tobacco products (HTPs), fruits and other agricultural products.The reciprocal trade proposal was pitched by Senate Foreign Relations Committee Vice Chairman Sen. Erwin Tulfo and Senate Committee on Agriculture, Food and Agrarian Reform Chairman Sen. Francis Pangilinan during an official parliamentary visit to the Japanese Diet to celebrate the 70th anniversary of Philippines-Japan Friendship.The push for zero tariffs aims to modernize the Japan-Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement. Signed originally in 2008, the treaty slashed or outright eliminated duties on over 90 percent of goods exchanged between the two Asian partners.However, emerging alternative sectors, such as HTPs, and shifting agricultural dynamics were completely unmapped when negotiations closed nearly two decades ago. The Department of Trade and Industry has been working to finalize renegotiation rounds to keep the bilateral framework relevant in the face of newer regional trade agreements. “With the emergence of new products from the Philippine tobacco industry and the increasing demand for them in Japan, we are respectfully asking the Japanese government to consider our proposal to exempt Philippine-made HTPs from tariffs,” Tulfo said during the legislative sessions.The trade push aimed to address global competitive disadvantages. Currently, European Union exporters enjoy preferential terms that place Philippine manufacturers at an economic handicap in the lucrative Japanese consumer market.The senators emphasized that removing the trade barriers will drive local manufacturing, optimize domestic agricultural supply chains, secure massive employment opportunities and establish a steady, resilient export pipeline to neighboring Asian economies.Heading the parliamentary mission were Senate President Sherwin Gatchalian and Majority Leader Juan Miguel Zubiri.Joining them were Senators Lito Lapid, Raffy Tulfo, JV Ejercito, Erwin Tulfo and Pangilinan.The senators also held discussions with the Sasakawa Peace

Foundation, with Tulfo expressing profound institutional gratitude for the foundation's continuous humanitarian and disaster-relief assistance to the Philippines.The Tokyo summit capitalizes on a reciprocal visit last Sept. 16 by a Japanese legislative delegation, led by Japanese Senate Vice President Fukuyama Tetsuro.

- SC allows video testimony to spare child witnesses from courtroom trauma (2026-11-05 16:01)

THE Supreme Court has revamped its rules on examining child witnesses, allowing video-link testimonies, recorded depositions and professionally conducted interviews to spare children from repeatedly reliving traumatic experiences in court.Under the Revised Rule on the Examination of Child Witnesses (RRECW), approved by the Court en banc on June 17, 2026 but only announced Wednesday, courts may allow children to testify through videoconferencing from outside the courtroom when appearing in person is likely to cause them further trauma.The new rules also allow electronically recorded depositions and recorded interviews conducted by trained professionals to be presented as evidence, subject to safeguards protecting the rights of the accused and other parties.In announcing the revised rules, the Court said the changes aim to make court proceedings more child-friendly while ensuring that children's voices are heard without exposing them to unnecessary psychological harm.Under the rules, judges may limit the people a child witness can see and hear during testimony, including the accused, while preserving the latter's constitutional right to confront witnesses.If identification of the accused is necessary, the accused may briefly appear on camera or be identified by the child through an image displayed on screen.Children who cannot testify in court or through videoconferencing because of disability, health concerns or other circumstances may instead give an electronically recorded deposition in the presence of the judge and lawyers from both sides. The recording may be used in place of their actual courtroom testimony.The revised rules also recognize recorded interviews conducted by a team of professionals as evidence, reducing the need for children to repeatedly recount painful incidents.

- NTF-Elcac welcomes FBI probe of CPP-NPA networks in US (2026-11-05 12:37)

MANILA, Philippines — The National Task Force to End Local Communist Armed Conflict (NTF-Elcac) welcomed reports that US authorities are investigating alleged recruitment, financing and logistical support networks of the Communist Party of the Philippines-New People's Army (CPP-NPA) operating in the United States, following reports that the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) had questioned the family of an American activist detained in the Philippines.NTF-Elcac spokesman Liza Fidelis Cañada said Americans and organizations suspected of supporting the communist insurgency should expect scrutiny from US authorities, noting that Washington designated the CPP-NPA as a foreign terrorist organization in 2002.The task force issued the statement on Thursday following disclosures by the communist-led National Democratic Front of the Philippines (NDFP) concerning alleged FBI inquiries involving the family of Gabe Pasion, an Anakbayan activist. Pasion reportedly said during a press conference in Baltimore organized by the International Coalition for Human Rights in the Philippines that FBI personnel and the US Embassy in Manila had repeatedly contacted his family through phone calls, home visits and inquiries at their workplaces.His sister, Christina Pasion, was arrested in July following a raid on a suspected communist safehouse in Laguna.Cañada said the reported inquiries should prompt closer examination of possible recruitment and support networks allegedly operating under the banner of human rights and social justice advocacy. "The allegations reported by the NDFP reinforce the need to investigate whether organizations operating under the banner of human rights and social justice are being exploited as recruitment and support networks for the CPP-NPA," she said.Cañada said the reported FBI inquiries came months after the US Embassy issued a security advisory in May warning Americans against NPA recruitment and involvement in armed insurgency activities. She cited several cases involving Americans who allegedly became involved with the communist movement in the Philippines.In January, Filipino-American Chantal Anicoche of Maryland was recovered near an armed encounter in Abra de Ilog, Occidental Mindoro. She later acknowledged traveling to the Philippines intending to join the NPA and staying in an insurgent camp before her repatriation, according to NTF-ELCAC.Christina Pasion, who had traveled with Anicoche, reportedly remained with the communist movement for several more months before being arrested in July alongside a wanted NPA member. In April, American activists Lyle Prijoles and Kai Dana-Rene Sorem, both linked to Anakbayan-USA, were among those killed during an armed encounter in Negros Occidental."These cases raise serious questions. Who recruited these young Americans? Who financed and facilitated their travel? What networks connected them with armed insurgents and ultimately placed their lives in danger?" Cañada said.She called for closer cooperation between Philippine and American authorities to investigate possible recruitment, financing and logistical support networks operating across borders."The Philippine government stands ready to cooperate and share relevant intelligence with the FBI and other competent American authorities," she said.Cañada also urged Filipino-American families, particularly parents of young people seeking to reconnect with their Philippine roots through activism, to remain vigilant against what she described as deceptive recruitment disguised as human rights or social justice advocacy."No political ideology justifies sacrificing young lives on the altar of a dying, violent rebellion," she said.

- Hontiveros pushes tighter citizenship checks (2026-11-05 11:25)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Risa Hontiveros said reforms in the country's civil registration and citizenship verification systems are crucial to national security.During a public hearing of the Senate Committee on Justice and Human Rights on Thursday, Hontiveros cited the case of businessman Joseph Sy as an example of how weaknesses in the civil registration system can pose broader national security concerns.Sy, chairman of Global Ferronickel Holdings Inc. and a former chairman of a major mining company, came under scrutiny after the Bureau of Immigration (BI) found that his fingerprints matched those of Chinese Chen Zhong Zhen.The investigation seeks to establish whether Sy is Joseph Cue Sy, as stated in his Philippine birth certificate, or the Chinese identified through the fingerprint match. Hontiveros said Sy's birth was registered only when he was 41 years old, with authorities subsequently finding serious irregularities in the documents supporting his late registration.These included the absence of records of the purported marriage of his declared parents, certifications that Sy and his supposed parents were not residents of their declared barangay, and a residential address that was reportedly found to be a vacant lot.A baptismal certificate submitted to support his birth registration also could not be authenticated by the purported parish, while the Philippine Statistics Authority (PSA) reportedly found no civil registry records for his supposed parents.Despite these red flags, the birth certificate was accepted into the country's civil registry.Hontiveros said that the consequences of questionable birth registrations extend beyond the issuance of a single government document, as birth certificates can serve as the foundation for obtaining Philippine passports, claiming citizenship rights, and accessing privileges reserved for Filipinos.These include eligibility to own land, participate in constitutionally restricted industries, and hold positions in institutions where nationality is a determining factor. In Sy's case, Hontiveros said that the businessman had become chairman of a major mining company and a member of the Philippine Coast Guard Auxiliary.Hontiveros said the problem is also reflected in raids on illegal Philippine Offshore Gaming Operators (POGOs), where foreign nationals have reportedly been found in possession of fraudulent Philippine identification documents."Every government document is ultimately an expression of trust. When the government declares that a person is Filipino, every other institution relies on that declaration. If the foundation of that identity can be manipulated, then the vulnerability does not end with the civil registry. It travels with that person throughout the entire government system. That is the loop we intend to close today," she said.Sy was absent from Thursday's hearing after reportedly being rushed to the emergency room of Makati Medical Center, according to his lawyer, Alma Fernandez-Mallonga."Early this morning, Mr. Sy called me up to say that he was in the emergency room of Makati Medical Center. He had been feeling unwell since last night," Mallonga told the panel.She said Sy had prepared to attend the hearing and respected the Senate proceedings but was unable to do so because of his medical condition. Mallonga committed to submitting medical documents to support her client's absence. She also informed the panel that Sy had been released from immigration detention almost a month ago and had undergone surgical procedures.Sy was arrested at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport in 2025 after arriving from Hong Kong. The reported fingerprint match subsequently raised questions about the authenticity of the documents supporting his claim to Filipino citizenship.

• India in final-stage talks to expand missile sale to Philippines, sources say (2026-11-05 10:24)

NEW DELHI/MANILA — India is in final-stage talks to expand its sale of supersonic cruise missiles to the Philippines, three sources with direct knowledge of the matter told Reuters, as New Delhi nears completion of deliveries under a 2022 deal.The Philippines is expected to buy about five BrahMos systems, nearly 60 missiles in total, in a deal potentially worth $700 million to $800 million, two of the Indian sources said."Manila has shown interest again to procure about 5 systems of the BrahMos and they now view India as a very reliable partner," one Indian source said.New Delhi's latest likely deal with the Philippines, which is modernizing its military and strengthening coastal defenses as tensions rise in the disputed South China Sea, is much higher than the last $375 million order of BrahMos for naval use.BrahMos, developed jointly by India and Russia, is among the world's fastest cruise missiles and can be launched from land, sea and air platforms.Arsenio Andolong, Philippines defense ministry spokesperson, told Reuters that President Ferdinand Marcos Jr had expressed his desire to acquire additional BrahMos missiles. Andolong did not offer more details.Speaking virtually at the Delhi Defense Dialogue on Wednesday, Philippine Defense Secretary Gilberto Teodoro said the Philippines hoped to secure more BrahMos units and had shared a wish list with Indian authorities to make the system more tailored to the Philippine environment.Reuters is the first to report the size and value of the deal.The additional purchase comes at a time when Manila is building its military strength as tension escalates with Beijing on overlapping claims in the South China Sea, where the two countries have clashed in recent years.India's defense and foreign ministries, as well as missile maker BrahMos Aerospace, did not respond to requests for comment.Interest in the BrahMos system has increased since last year's four-day conflict between India and Pakistan, when India used the weapons system for the first time in battle.In July, Delhi announced the supply of BrahMos missiles to Indonesia and has also signed a deal with Vietnam. It is in talks on the system with a number of other countries including UAE, Thailand, South Africa and Brazil.India's defense exports for the fiscal year to March reached 384.24 billion rupees ($4.11 billion), a jump of more than 62% from the same period the year before, government data showed.

Filipino-looking victims were discovered in the older Markle’s devices. Some of the children in the video were estimated to be only 10 to 11 years old.The investigation began after Markle Jr. discovered the materials while searching for a cellphone at a friend's house in Cordova, Cebu, where his father's belongings had been left. He subsequently turned over the digital devices to authorities.Remulla described the recovered materials as among the most disturbing cases he had encountered, but said investigators have yet to establish whether the devices and contents indeed belonged to Markle Sr.The elder Markle, father of Duchess of Sussex Meghan Markle, lived in a high-rise apartment in Cebu City from January 2025 until May 2026. He returned to the United States in May for medical treatment and a prosthetic limb after suffering a severe blood clot in late 2025 that led to the amputation of his left leg below the knee.Authorities are also seeking assistance from the US Federal Bureau of Investigation in determining the ownership of six mobile phones that originated from the US. Remulla said investigators expect to obtain developments in the case in the coming days as they continue examining the recovered devices and validating information on the possible involvement of the younger Markle.

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. led the first delivery of natural gas from Malampaya's newly developed offshore wells in Batangas City.Speaking at the Malampaya Onshore Gas Plant on Thursday, Marcos said the new wells would help move the Philippines closer to energy independence. "Maximizing the use of Malampaya gas could contribute to more competitive power rates because we are relying less on imported energy sources that are subject to volatile international energy prices," he said in his speech.

• Padilla, Tulfo statistically tied — survey (2026-11-05 04:10)

MANILA, Philippines — If the elections were held today, Senators Robin Padilla and Raffy Tulfo would be statistically tied in the vice presidential race, a survey by Momentum Research showed.Padilla's support rose to 20 percent in October from 15 percent in August, while Tulfo's dropped to 18 percent from 25 percent during the same period, the October 2026 National Momentum Survey revealed.Sen. Bong Go maintained his 14 percent support, while Sen. Rodante Marcoleta remained at 9 percent.Sen. Bam Aquino gained two percentage points to 10 percent, while Sen. Kiko Pangilinan more than doubled his support from 3 percent to 7 percent.Sen. • Tulfo retracts claim on Romualdez: I was fed wrong info (2026-11-05 03:11)

MANILA, Philippines — Journalist Ramon Tulfo on Thursday retracted his claim that former speaker Martin Romualdez has been sneaking out of jail. "I was fed the wrong report that former speaker Martin Romualdez could go in and out of jail," Tulfo said in a Facebook post. He admitted that one of the most embarrassing and humiliating experiences of a journalist is spreading wrong information.Reports that Romualdez has been going out of the Quezon City Jail - Male Dormitory prompted the Sandiganbayan Third Division to order the Bureau of Jail Management and Penology to review CCTV footage and account for his whereabouts from the time he was brought to jail until Nov. 4.The bureau was directed to submit a notarized report by Monday, Nov. 9, along with CCTV maintenance records, access logs, records of possible footage alterations, power interruptions, vehicle movements and ambulance use. "Accused Ferdinand Martin G. Romualdez shall not be moved, removed, transferred and/or otherwise be released from his detention at the Quezon City Jail - Male Dormitory unless ordered by the court," the Sandiganbayan said.

• VP defense team respects Sarmiento’s decision not to testify in impeachment trial (2026-11-05 02:46)

MANILA, Philippines — The defense team of Vice President Sara Duterte said it respects the decision of law professor Dean Ralph Sarmiento declining their invitation for him to serve as a defense witness in her impeachment trial.Michael Poa, spokesman for the Vice President’s defense camp, said that they would honor the legal scholar’s decision. This development follows a manifestation filed by the defense on Wednesday requesting the Senate Impeachment Court to issue a subpoena duces tecum and subpoena testificandum to Sarmiento, a respected faculty member of political and constitutional law at the University of St. La Salle (USLS) College of Law and its former vice chancellor for administration.The defense planned to make Sarmiento as its anchor witness for November 9 to testify on the foundational constitutional principles relevant to Article II of the impeachment complaint, which focuses on allegations of unexplained wealth against Vice President Duterte.However, Sarmiento declined the invitation, citing a desire to protect his academic freedom. In a statement, he thanked the defense team for recognizing his work but noted that he never anticipated his digital commentary becoming part of an actual impeachment trial.Sarmiento has a substantial online footprint, commanding over 318,000 followers on Facebook, where he frequently posts balanced analyses, including recent commentary emphasizing the need for procedural fairness after the prosecution dropped three out of four charges against Duterte."After careful consideration, I have decided to decline participation as a witness in the proceedings," Sarmiento stated. "This is a personal decision to preserve the independence of my constitutional law scholarship and the impartiality of my legal views and opinions."Sarmiento added that he has reached out to the defense to request that they withdraw their motion for a subpoena, or move for its immediate recall if the court has already issued it. He maintained that he remains fully committed to fostering public understanding of the Constitution through an independent lens.Poa extended the defense team's gratitude for Sarmiento's initial consideration.

• Pangilinan pushes expanded agricultural insurance protection for famers, fisherfolk (2026-11-05 02:26)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Francis Pangilinan is pushing for stronger and more comprehensive agricultural insurance protection for farmers and fisherfolk through a measure seeking to expand insurance coverage and ensure the continued operation of the Philippine Crop Insurance Corporation (PCIC).Pangilinan filed Senate Bill 2583 on Oct. 29, proposing to strengthen the PCIC by extending its corporate term and its insurance services through further amendments to Presidential Decree No. 1467.The measure seeks to bolster the agricultural sector’s resilience against climate-related risks, particularly with the looming threat of a strong El Niño that could trigger severe drought, disrupt agricultural production, and jeopardize the livelihoods of farmers and fisherfolk, as well as the country’s food security. “Agricultural insurance protects farmers and fisherfolk against losses, supports continued production, and facilitates access to financing. Strengthening and modernizing the Philippine Crop Insurance Corporation (PCIC) is therefore essential to making insurance protection more accessible, responsive, and sustainable," Pangilinan said in the bill's explanatory note.Citing Philippine Statistics Authority data, he noted that poverty incidence among farmers and fisherfolk reached 27 percent and 27.4 percent, respectively, in 2023, highlighting the need for stronger government support for these vulnerable sectors.He said that agricultural insurance serves as a critical safety net, helping farmers and fisherfolk recover from losses caused by natural calamities, climate-related disruptions, and other agricultural risks. It also helps sustain food production and improves their access to credit.Under the measure, the PCIC's insurance coverage would be expanded to cover a broader range of agricultural commodities and assets, including palay, corn, high-value crops, livestock, aquaculture and fishery products, agroforestry crops, and forest plantations.Coverage would also extend to agricultural machinery, equipment, transport facilities, and infrastructure.The bill likewise seeks to strengthen the PCIC's authority to provide life and accident term insurance coverage for farmers and fisherfolk.

- DOTr deploys 20 buses to ease LRT-2 congestion (2026-11-05 01:57)

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Transportation (DOTr) has deployed 20 buses to give Light Rail Transit Line 2 (LRT-2) commuters an alternative during rush hour.The buses will initially serve commuters traveling from Antipolo City in Rizal to Cubao, Quezon City and Legarda, including students heading to schools and universities in Manila, DOTr Secretary Vince Dizon said on Thursday.The initiative aimed to ease pressure on the LRT-2, which has been unable to accommodate thousands of passengers because of its limited number of operational trains, Dizon said.Under the trial arrangement, the regular fare from Antipolo to Legarda, originally P80, was reduced by 20 percent to P66. Students will pay P55.The bus deployment was a temporary measure while the government works on longer-term solutions to the LRT-2's operational problems, said Dizon, a former Department of Public Works and Highways chief.During Wednesday's inspection at the Masinag station in Antipolo, Dizon said around 4,000 passengers during the 6 to 8 a.m. peak period could not be served by the rail line.The DOTr chief noted that commuters sometimes had to wait 30 to 45 minutes in line before boarding a train. Only 10 trains are operational and that number could decline further when some break down.Dizon attributed the shortage to years of inadequate maintenance and funding, noting that the trains are 25 to 27 years old and have not been replaced.Buying new trains would not immediately solve the problem, as delivery could take three to four years and the government has yet to allocate funds for the purchase."We cannot solve this overnight. I apologize to our commuters because this is not an easy problem to address," Dizon said.The DOTr is also studying the possibility of establishing a busway-style system along Marcos Highway in Rizal to make trips faster.

- DepEd reports improved reading levels under ARAL program (2026-11-04 19:19)

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Education (DepEd) reported a decrease from 6.7 million to 4.5 million in the number of learners with reading difficulties under its Academic Recovery and Accessible Learning (ARAL) program.Education Secretary Sonny Angara said that the results were encouraging after one year of implementation."From 6.7 million, it became 4.5 million whose reading levels improved. So it's very encouraging and that's only after one year," Angara said in Filipino and English during an interview after the ribbon-cutting ceremony of the Iloilo Numeracy and Literacy Expo at Punta Villa Resort in Iloilo on Wednesday. Angara said that the ARAL program was intended to address learning deficiencies so that difficulties in reading would not carry over from one school year to another.He also said that DepEd had issued policy guidelines on weather conditions, providing for alternative learning modes when temperatures become too high.On classroom construction, Angara said local governments in Iloilo were providing funds to complement the national government's assistance, adding that the classroom deficit was decreasing in Iloilo and Panay.

- Sotto pushes rules to address prolonged absences of senators (2026-11-04 18:50)

MANILA, Philippines — Senate President Pro Tempore Vicente Sotto III is seeking clearer rules to address senators who remain absent from their duties for extended periods without authorization, saying prolonged absenteeism undermines public accountability and wastes taxpayers' money.In Senate Resolution No. 751, filed on Oct. 27, Sotto urged the Senate Committee on Rules to review existing regulations and establish mechanisms for addressing prolonged unauthorized absences among Senate members.Sotto said the measure seeks to address a gap in the chamber's existing rules, particularly when a senator's extended absence affects the performance of legislative functions."As public servants elected by the Filipino people and whose salaries and allowances are derived from the taxes they have paid, we owe it to them to perform our duties with diligence and to represent them in the legislative framework," Sotto said in the resolution.He invoked the constitutional principle that public office is a public trust, stressing that government officials must remain accountable to the people and discharge their responsibilities with utmost responsibility, integrity, loyalty and efficiency.Sotto noted that prolonged absenteeism and alleged neglect of duty had become matters of public concern, with complaints against some senators already filed before the chamber's Committee on Ethics."Such absenteeism and neglect of duty is deemed a waste of taxpayer funds and has caused public clamor over the past months," he said.Sotto said the Senate must revisit its rules to determine the appropriate response to prolonged unauthorized absences and ensure that senators meet the standards of public service expected of them."There is a need to revisit the current Rules of the Senate to study the best possible approach as regards the issue of prolonged unauthorized absence of the members of the Senate with the view of ensuring highest standards of public service commensurate to the trust reposed by the electorate," he said."No less than the 1987 Constitution has pronounced that public office is public trust and that all public officials and employees must at all times be accountable to the people they serve and must serve with utmost responsibility, integrity, loyalty, and efficiency," he added.

- Jail officials quizzed on Romualdez report (2026-11-04 16:21)

THE Sandiganbayan 3rd Division has summoned two jail officials to testify on Thursday on the custody of former speaker Martin Romualdez following reports alleging he had been secretly leaving his detention facility.Clerk of Court for the 3rd Division, Dennis Pulma, told The Manila Times on Wednesday that the court ordered Jail Supt. Maria Lourdes Pacion and medical officer Henry Fabro of the Quezon City Jail-Male Dormitory in Payatas, Quezon City, to "personally appear and testify" at 8:30 a.m. on Nov. 5."In light of the recent online news articles," the court issued the resolution to establish the "current status of accused Ferdinand Martin G. Romualdez's custody at BJMP Payatas," Pulma said, referring to the Bureau of Jail Management and Penology (BJMP).The summons followed allegations that Romualdez had been leaving jail without authorization. The BJMP has launched an investigation and said its initial closed-circuit television (CCTV) review found no recorded movement by Romualdez outside the facility during the period examined.The BJMP has launched an investigation into the claims, but BJMP chief JDIR Efren Nemeño said initial CCTV reviews showed no recorded power interruption at the Quezon City Jail–Male Dormitory or any recorded movement of the lawmaker inside his cell."Initial CCTV verification by BJMP National Headquarters showed no recorded power or CCTV interruption at the New Quezon City Jail-Male Dormitory, and no recorded movement of Rep. Martin Romualdez outside the facility during the period examined," the agency said in a statement on Wednesday.The investigation came after columnist Ramon Tulfo claimed on social media that Romualdez is secretly leaving and returning to the jail through a backdoor arrangement designed to keep his movements hidden.Tulfo said an asset he called "Tweety Bird" alleged that Romualdez uses a staircase while the facility's electricity is intentionally cut to prevent CCTV cameras from capturing his movements.The former speaker supposedly takes the backdoor stairs where an ambulance is waiting for him — a movement Tulfo alleged was also done by former senator Bong Revilla as well as Sen. Jinggoy Estrada, who have both been committed to the same facility due over the flood control scandal.A CCTV clip sent to The Manila Times dated Nov. 4 showed Romualdez was inside the detention center wearing the yellow shirt for persons deprived of liberty on that day.In his post, Tulfo did not mention any particular date when the former speaker supposedly sneaked out, but the BJMP conducted a thorough CCTV review since September to confirm the allegations.Romualdez was committed to the New Quezon City Jail-Male Dormitory since Sept. 14 over his alleged connection to the flood control controversy.Bustinera reiterated that CCTV monitoring remained fully operational with no unrecorded movement or power outages recorded.The BJMP said it takes such allegations seriously but reiterated that "all PDL (person deprived of liberty) are subject to the same custodial rules and that any movement outside the jail requires a proper court order." "We welcome relevant information from the public and will cooperate with any investigation by other government agencies," the agency said.The BJMP also assured the public of professionalism, transparency and commitment to equal treatment of all PDLs "without distinction or special privilege."

- 'VP defense team has no defense vs bank records' (2026-11-04 16:20)

THE defense team of Vice President Sara Duterte is “defenseless,” a member of the House prosecution team said on Wednesday.Trial spokesman and former Surigao del Norte representative Robert Ace Barbers made the assertion as he reiterated that Duterte’s counsels would be hard-pressed to counter evidence presented by the prosecution when the materials themselves came from the vice president’s camp.“The defense is defenseless. In other words, how can you refute the evidence presented by the prosecution — given that the very documents submitted actually originated from the defense camp itself?” Barbers said in Filipino in a press conference.“Bank records will never lie. I don’t think the bank managers will deny the existence of outstanding balances they reported before the impeachment court to controvert what the prosecution team laid down,” he added.The former lawmaker also noted that the panel already expected the defense team to object to its formal offer of evidence.In its comment before the Senate Impeachment Court, Duterte’s defense team sought to exclude key documentary evidence, including records from the Securities and Exchange Commission, Bureau of Internal Revenue and Anti-Money Laundering Council, citing technical defects, lack of witness authentication and failure to establish a direct link to impeachable offenses.“We already expected that they would do that. They will attack the technicality of the trial. They will attack the documents that we have presented as evidence,” Barbers said.“They will attack that. They will say it’s wrong, that it’s not allowed — simply because they have no counterargument,” he added.The panel has withdrawn three of the four Articles of Impeachment against the vice president, leaving only Article II, which accuses Duterte of amassing unexplained wealth disproportionate to her lawful income, failing to truthfully disclose her assets and liabilities in her SALNs (statements of assets, liabilities and net worth) and maintaining prohibited business interests.One of the panel’s witnesses, forensic accounting expert and lawyer Alexander Cabrera, earlier identified about P817.87 million in alleged unexplained wealth involving Duterte and her husband, lawyer Manases Carpio, from 2022 to 2025. A broader computation placed the amount at about P1.5 billion, which the defense has disputed.“The evidence is substantial, and it is extremely difficult to refute or disprove — not least because it consists of actual documents, which cannot lie; this is not evidence that could have been fabricated,” Barbers said.“So, once again, I would like to say that it will be difficult for the defense to challenge, or perhaps even rebut, the evidence we have presented,” he added.The impeachment proceedings will resume on Nov. 9, with the Duterte defense team reportedly out to present 90 witnesses.Barbers argued that the opposing side cannot simply overwhelm the proceedings with witnesses, lengthy arguments or procedural objections while leaving fundamental questions about the vice president’s declared wealth, income, assets and financial transactions unanswered. “The number of witnesses is not the measure of the truth. What matters is whether they can address the documents and figures presented by the prosecution,” he said.Duterte, he said, must explain whether her declared income reasonably accounts for the accumulation of her wealth and whether all business interests, investments and other financial holdings were properly disclosed.“If all transactions were proper and above board, every figure should be explainable. Simply denying or casting doubt on the documents is not enough. These must be addressed with clear, concrete explanations and evidence,” Barbers said.“The defense has the right to defend their client, but this process should not be used as an excuse to evade serious questions that need to be answered," he added.

- PNP vows 'Bato' arrest despite his police ties (2026-11-04 16:19)

THE Philippine National Police (PNP) reiterated their unwavering vow to implement the arrest warrant against Sen. Ronald dela Rosa regardless of his ties with the law enforcement agency he once led and served almost all his life. "Our chief PNP made it abundantly clear that we will not allow any hindrance, regardless of the person's position or previous public position, we will do our duty, we will implement the warrant of arrest," Col. Allen Rae Co, PNP spokesman, said in a press briefing.The PNP's answer came following the challenge issued by Palace Press Secretary Claire Castro to PNP chief Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. to pursue the arrest of dela Rosa despite his historical connections.Dela Rosa is wanted by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for crimes against humanity for his role in the bloody war on drugs, when he was then-president Rodrigo Duterte's PNP chief.Castro made the challenge following Local Government Secretary Jonvic Remulla's pronouncement that dela Rosa's connection as former PNP chief and a graduate of the Philippine Military Academy are making his arrest more difficult. "We understand that this is not a matter of personal discretion or political consideration. The PNP does not play politics. We remain true to our oath of fulfilling our duty within the law," Co said.Remulla repeatedly said that dela Rosa is being coddled by a powerful armed group whom the government would rather negotiate with than risk 10,000 just for the arrest of one man.While not divulging the results of the negotiations, the government has issued a P50-million bounty for information leading to the arrest of dela Rosa, tagged him as "armed and dangerous," and gave him a week to surrender.The week has passed with no surrender or feelers from the fugitive senator. His camp, through his lawyer, even renewed their petition before the Supreme Court to block the ICC arrest citing recent developments such as the bounty and the armed and dangerous tag as dangers to his life.Sen. Panfilo Lacson, a former PNP chief himself, said the PNP and the Department of the Interior and Local Government should refrain from divulging information on manhunts.The PNP expressed agreement with Lacson's statement and maintained that indeed, they are keeping the integrity of operational details.Lacson on Wednesday said that Philippine courts must be respected and local legal procedures observed if dela Rosa is arrested.Lacson said dela Rosa should be placed under the custody of a Philippine court, even in a ministerial capacity, if authorities apprehend him so he can avail himself of all legal remedies available under Philippine law, including recourse to the Supreme Court. "That's part of due process — if he is arrested, he may be placed under the custody of a local court where he can avail of all legal remedies up to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court will be the final arbiter of the law," Lacson said in an interview on radio DZMM.He cited Section 17 of Republic Act 9851, or the Philippine Act on Crimes Against International Humanitarian Law, Genocide and Other Crimes Against Humanity, which establishes the country's jurisdiction over persons suspected or accused of crimes covered by the law under specified circumstances.These include cases in which the accused is a Filipino citizen, is present in the Philippines regardless of citizenship or residence, or has committed the alleged crime against a Filipino citizen.However, the law also allows Philippine authorities, in the interest of justice, to defer investigation or prosecution when another court or international tribunal is already investigating or prosecuting the same crime. Authorities may instead surrender or extradite the accused to the appropriate international court or another state, subject to applicable laws and treaties.Lacson also cited Article 17 of the Rome Statute of the ICC, which provides that a case may be deemed inadmissible before the ICC if it is being investigated or prosecuted by a state with jurisdiction over it, unless that state is unwilling or unable genuinely to carry out the proceedings.The same provision covers cases in which a state has investigated an alleged crime but decided not to prosecute, unless the decision resulted from its unwillingness or inability to genuinely pursue the case.

- Duterte lead over Robredo narrows to 7 points – OCTA (2026-11-04 16:18)

VICE President Sara Duterte's lead over former vice president and current Naga City Mayor Leni Robredo in a hypothetical 2028 presidential matchup has narrowed to 7 percentage points, the smallest recorded by OCTA Research in its 2026 surveys.Duterte obtained 40 percent against Robredo's 33 percent in the third-quarter 2026 Tugon ng Masa survey conducted from Sept. 28 to Oct. 4 among 1,200 adult Filipinos nationwide.The seven-point margin was down from 11 points in the first quarter, when Duterte registered 46 percent against Robredo's 35 percent, and nine points in the second quarter, when the figures stood at 43 percent and 34 percent, respectively.OCTA said Duterte's preference had declined by 6 percentage points over the three survey rounds, while Robredo's remained relatively stable, ranging from 33 percent to 35 percent.The proportion of respondents who chose neither candidate or did not know whom to vote for rose to 26 percent in the latest survey, from 22 percent in the second quarter and 19 percent in the first quarter.The growing undecided bloc suggests that voters moving away from Duterte have not necessarily shifted their preference to Robredo, OCTA said.Despite the narrowing margin, Duterte remained ahead nationally, with her seven-point lead outside the survey's plus-or-minus 3-percentage-point margin of error.The survey results also showed significant regional differences in the hypothetical matchup.Robredo led Duterte in the National Capital Region, with 39 percent against 32 percent, and in Balance Luzon, where she received 49 percent against Duterte's 24 percent.Duterte, meanwhile, maintained a commanding lead in Mindanao, with 71 percent against Robredo's 2 percent. She also led in Visayas, 46 percent to 27 percent.By socioeconomic grouping, Robredo led among Class ABC respondents, with 40 percent against Duterte's 32 percent.She also made an 11-point gain among Class E respondents, rising from 31 percent in the second quarter to 42 percent in the latest survey, while Duterte's preference fell from 51 percent to 41 percent.OCTA said the two were statistically tied in Class E, although the relatively small sample of 109 respondents warranted caution in interpreting the results.Duterte continued to lead in Class D, which accounts for roughly 4 in 5 adult Filipinos, with 41 percent against Robredo's 31 percent. Twenty-eight percent in this group were undecided.The survey also showed Robredo narrowly leading among women, 38 percent to 35 percent, and urban residents, 38 percent to 35 percent. Duterte led among men, 45 percent to 28 percent, and rural residents, 47 percent to 25 percent.Duterte maintained her advantage among voters below 45 years old, while Robredo held narrow leads among those aged 45 and older.OCTA said the findings should be treated as an early measure of public sentiment rather than a prediction of the May 2028 elections.The survey was conducted while Duterte's impeachment trial was ongoing. However, OCTA cautioned that its findings did not establish whether the proceedings influenced respondents' voting preferences.Robredo has repeatedly said she would not seek national office in 2028 and was likely to pursue another term as Naga City mayor.OCTA noted that the hypothetical matchup therefore measured Robredo's standing among voters rather than support for an actual presidential candidacy.The survey had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points at a 95-percent confidence level.

- Democrats win US Congress in midterm rout of Trump (2026-11-04 16:18)

WASHINGTON D.C. — Democrats seized control of the United States Congress on Tuesday (Wednesday in Manila), capturing the Senate and House of Representatives in a stunning, nationwide rejection of Donald Trump set to put the brakes on the final two years of his presidency.The Democratic landslide will give the opposition power to block legislation, launch broad investigations into Trump's administration, and thwart his judicial and senior government appointments.The results reflected deep anger over living costs, tariffs and Trump's war against Iran, which has sent fuel prices soaring and compounded dissatisfaction with an already deeply unpopular president. "I'm just so happy. I'm so eager," 22-year-old paralegal Michael Diaz said in Georgia, celebrating a big win by rising Democratic star Jon Ossoff in the Senate.Trump struck a conciliatory note despite his history of questioning elections, telling The New York Times he was "absolutely willing" to accept the results. "I think the Democrats did a good job, I really do," the 80-year-old told Fox News, in rare praise for his political opponents. "They fought hard."But he sought to distance himself from his own party's poor showing, adding that "I don't view it as a hit on me."He acknowledged that the Iran conflict had contributed to the defeat, while defending the military campaign, and he suggested the rival parties could find common ground on immigration, long one of the most divisive issues of his presidency.Republican heartlandAs Trump was conceding, the scale of the Democratic victory grew further when former logger Troy Jackson defeated longtime Republican senator Susan Collins in Maine, the party's seventh Senate seat captured from Republicans.Earlier breakthroughs in Kansas and Iowa had clinched the Senate majority for Democrats, following stunning victories in Texas, South Carolina, North Carolina and Ohio.In Kansas, Methodist minister Adam Hamilton became the first Democrat elected to the Senate from the reliably conservative state since 1932. Iowa had not elected a Democratic senator since 2008.Texas Democrat James Talarico declared he had defeated "Goliath" in winning a Senate seat while Gina Hinojosa unseated the state's Republican governor Greg Abbott, ending decades of Republican rule.Democrats also protected key Senate seats of their own, including Ossoff in Georgia and an open seat in New Hampshire.The party's House victory saw gains across Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Arizona, North Carolina and New Jersey, including districts Trump had carried comfortably in 2024.In one closely watched bellwether, Democrat J.D. Ford ousted Republican congresswoman Victoria Spartz in Indiana, capturing a district Trump won by 17 points two years earlier.Democrats also won Georgia's governorship, electing former Atlanta mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms as the first Black woman governor in US history.Republicans had some consolation in Florida, where Trump-backed Byron Donalds became the state's first Black governor and Ashley Moody retained a Senate seat — but only after seeing off surprisingly strong Democratic challenges.The night was "a big wipeout and a strong repudiation of Donald Trump and his policies," George Washington University professor Todd Belt told Agence France-Presse (AFP).Trump on defensiveDemocratic control of Congress will allow the party to pursue investigations into the Iran war, immigration enforcement and allegations of corruption, while blocking Trump's legislation and senior appointments.Robert Garcia, now expected to lead the powerful House Oversight Committee, warned Republicans on social media: "LAWYER UP." House Democratic leader Hakeem Jeffries declared Trump's MAGA movement "on the run from sea to shining sea." Jeffries could become the first Black speaker of the House when the new Congress convenes in January.Despite his conciliatory remarks, Trump also insisted on social media that Republicans would have won "IN A LANDSLIDE" if he had been running, after repeatedly urging supporters throughout the campaign to "pretend I'm on the ballot." He also repeated his threat to use the presidential veto on Democratic-passed laws, posting a picture on social media of a red baseball cap reading just: "VETO."

- P555M fine vs Move It for 'ghost riders' hailed (2026-11-04 16:17)

A BROAD coalition of consumer, transport, legal and motorcycle rider groups has commended the Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board (LTFRB) for slapping Move It with a P555.75-million fine over "ghost riders" that exceeded its authorized allocation.The group vowed on Wednesday to keep a close watch on how the penalty is enforced while pressing for stronger safeguards for commuter safety and rider livelihoods.The groups backing the statement are the National Confederation of Tricycle Operators and Drivers Associations of the Philippines (Nactodap); National Public Transport Coalition (NPTC); Digital Pinoys; Lawyers for Commuters' Safety and Protection; Kapatiran ng Dalawang Gulong (Kagulong); Motorcycle Taxi Rider Organization (Metro); Samahang Manibela Mananakay at Nagkaisang Terminal ng Transportasyon (Manibela); and Pilipino Society and Development Advocates for Commuters and Consumers.The LTFRB in its Oct. 9 decision found that Move It had 73,321 active riders on its platform against an authorized allocation of only 17,746 — an excess of 55,575 riders. "We previously filed a case against the excessive number of motorcycle taxis affecting the livelihood of tricycle drivers. Now, it has been proven that what we were fighting for was right," said Ariel Lim of NPTC and Nactodap in a press briefing.The coalition raised concerns over how mandatory rider accreditation, training and safety standards were verified given the scale of the excess onboarding cited by the LTFRB. "For commuters, the question is not simply motorcycle availability during rush hour. It is whether every rider is properly documented, trained and safe to provide the service," said Ronald Gustilo, Digital Pinoys national campaigner. "Safety and commuter protection cannot be set aside just to meet demand," Gustilo added.The coalition also recalled the earlier controversy over government fuel assistance when discrepancies in rider and driver records forced the Department of Social Welfare and Development to conduct additional verification. “We have long questioned the overboarding and its impact on commuter safety. Public funds are also at stake when the records used in distributing aid are inaccurate. We must ensure that assistance goes to legitimate beneficiaries,” Gustilo said.Metro said ordinary riders should not be held responsible for onboarding decisions made by platform management. “For our fellow MC Taxi riders, we all ride to earn a decent living and bring something home to our families. It was not the riders who made the decisions on how many the company should onboard,” said Jayson Luna, Metro’s lead convenor.Don Pangan, Kagulong secretary-general, emphasized the need to shield rider livelihoods. “If a platform exceeds its authorized rider allocation, the company should explain and be held accountable. Riders should not be used as a shield for the company’s decisions and violations,” Pangan said.Manibela likewise emphasized that adherence to existing regulations is indispensable to the legitimacy of motorcycle taxi operations. “How can a sector become fully legal if, even now, the rules are not being followed? It must be clear that compliance with the law is everyone’s obligation, without exception,” said Mar Valbuena, Manibela chairman.The groups said they would closely track the LTFRB’s and the Department of Transportation’s next moves in enforcing the fine, urging transparent and consistent action that holds operators accountable, protects commuters and avoids unfairly penalizing ordinary riders.The LTFRB said that Move It filed a motion for reconsideration before the bureau. “What the agency is focused on is addressing the plight of the thousands of overboarded riders who invested their own resources to earn a decent living — and whose only fault was that they acted in good faith and trusted that they were allowed to operate under the existing rules and regulations,” acting LTFRB Chairman Greg Pua Jr. said.He said the LTFRB is currently crafting measures in dealing with the issue in relation to the affected riders while ensuring that the online boarding system of ride-hailing services is strictly complying with the government’s regulations.

- Marcos to name next chief justice this week (2026-11-04 16:16)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. will announce this week the successor to Chief Justice Alexander Gesmundo, who is set to retire on Friday, Malacañang said on Wednesday.Presidential Communications Office Undersecretary Claire Castro said all of the contenders for the top judiciary position “have their own strengths and their own integrity.” “Don’t worry, the next chief justice will be announced this week. We will not preempt our president.” The Judicial and Bar Council shortlisted five Supreme Court associate justices to succeed Gesmundo. They are Marvic Leonen, Alfredo Benjamin Caguioa, Rodil Zalameda, Japar Dimaampao and Jose Midas Marquez.In a letter to the president dated Oct. 14, former Chief Justice Reynato Puno endorsed Associate Justice Jose Midas Marquez for the top post in the judiciary.Puno said Marquez’s extensive administrative background, familiarity with the Supreme Court’s internal operations and experience coordinating with other branches of government make him a strong candidate to lead the judiciary.Puno, who served as chief justice from December 2006 to 2010, said he had personally witnessed Marquez’s work ethic and professional competence during his 17 years at the Supreme Court.When Puno assumed the chief justice post in December 2006, Marquez served as his chief of staff while concurrently holding key positions as assistant court administrator, head of the Public Information Office and Supreme Court spokesman.Puno said Marquez performed these responsibilities with consistent excellence.Marquez has served the Supreme Court for 30 years, including about 12 years as court administrator before becoming an associate justice five years ago.” More than any aspirant, Justice Marquez is most familiar with how the Supreme Court works, especially its internal processes,” he added.Beyond his experience within the judiciary, Puno highlighted Marquez’s exposure to inter-branch relations through assignments that required him to coordinate with officials of the executive and legislative departments.

- House checks delivery of P6.2B El Niño aid (2026-11-04 16:15)

THE House of Representatives’ Committee on Agriculture and Food continued its inquiry on Wednesday into government preparations and responses to El Niño, including the distribution of the P6.2 billion in aid to 310,000 farmers and fisherfolk.” We must verify whether field disbursements in hit regions are reaching intended beneficiaries,” the panel’s head, Quezon Rep. Mark Enverga, said, pertaining to the assistance under the Unified Package for Livelihoods, Industry, Food and Transport program.The committee is examining the P371-million shortfall for interventions such as cloud seeding and measures to combat pests threatening sugarcane production.The Department of Agriculture (DA) has proposed a consolidated P61.99-billion action plan, which lawmakers are assessing for its capacity to protect agricultural communities.Enverga emphasized the immediacy of the need.” Our farmers and fisherfolk can no longer afford to wait. We are asking all agencies attending today to provide clear and honest answers so we can immediately deliver swift and targeted assistance to the agricultural sector,” he said.Sultan Kudarat Rep. Bella Vanessa Suansing, who introduced House Resolution 967, said Wednesday’s hearing should establish what has been accomplished since the issue was discussed in June.She sought updates on Republic Act 12287, or the Declaration of State of Imminent Disaster Act, particularly whether disaster declarations had led to the release of funds for preventive measures.” We hope to hear from the DA on updates to its commitments from last June, as well as its plans and mandate to provide alternative sources of income and livelihood for our farmers and fisherfolk,” Suansing said.At the Senate, Sen. Francis Pangilinan urged President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. on Wednesday to establish an online public accountability dashboard to track government spending and the delivery of interventions on El Niño.” I call on the President to direct the NDRRMC (National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council), through OCD (Office of Civil Defense) and the concerned agencies, to maintain a single, coordinated El Niño action plan with named leads, measurable targets, and regular public reporting,” Pangilinan said.” The backbone of all these efforts is the proper use of taxpayers’ money. The public must know clearly where the funds are going, what the government is doing, and what results these measures are achieving,” he added.Meanwhile, Malacañang said it has ordered the pre-positioning of irrigation pipes and solar-powered water pumps for farmers expected to be affected by the super El Niño.This comes after the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration said that 12 areas may experience drought by the end of November, particularly Nueva Vizcaya and other parts of Region 2 (Cagayan Valley).” Our fellow citizens in Nueva Vizcaya need not worry, as preparations are indeed being made for the effects of El Niño — especially here in Cagayan Valley, in Region 2,” Palace Press Officer Claire Castro said in Filipino.Castro said the government began implementing preventive measures as early as June.On Oct. 28, she said P20 million in funds were allocated to provide solar-powered water pumps and fuel assistance to farmers.Castro said the DA has invested P17.9 million in farm inputs to help farmers mitigate the impacts of the drought.The Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) has allocated P702.62 million in financial assistance to benefit 68,905 individuals through a unified package for livelihood, industry, food and transport assistance.” So, in all affected areas — especially those specifically targeted by the very strong El Niño — assistance from the National Irrigation Administration, the DSWD, and the DA is being provided to help alleviate any hardships that may arise from this very strong El Niño,” Castro said.

- Procurement integrity bill pushed (2026-11-04 16:14)

SENATE President Sherwin Gatchalian said Senate Bill 1962, or the proposed Government Contracting and Procurement Integrity Act, is a vital safeguard to transparency in government contracts, as his colleagues approved the measure on third and final reading.” It is important that we enact this into law as soon as possible to ensure that public funds are directed toward programs and projects that benefit the people, rather than merely serving the relatives of those in power,” said Gatchalian, a principal author of the bill.Under the bill, relatives within the fourth civil degree of consanguinity or affinity are strictly prohibited from entering into contracts with government agencies where their kin exercise official functions or influence. The anti-nepotism ban encompasses immediate family as well as extended relations up to first cousins, including parents, children, siblings, grandparents, grandchildren, uncles, aunts, nephews and nieces.The broad coverage applies to elected national and local officials, Cabinet secretaries, undersecretaries, assistant secretaries, officers and board members of government-owned and -controlled corporations, and officials of state universities and colleges, along with their designated alternates.The bill covers a comprehensive scope of government transactions, including public infrastructure projects, procurement of goods and services, supplies, machinery, joint ventures and public-private partnership agreements involving public funds or government property.To enforce compliance, the proposed law imposes severe penal sanctions. Public officials and personnel who violate the prohibition face imprisonment ranging from one to three years, fines of at least P100,000 and perpetual disqualification from holding any public office.The measure will undergo bicameral reconciliation before it is submitted to the president for signature.

- Asean chief leads call for regional cooperation on 'ethical, safe AI' (2026-11-04 16:13)

FUZHOU, China — Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) Secretary General Kao Kim Hourn led the call for regional cooperation on "responsible governance and ethics, a safety network, and harnessing infrastructure" amid the rapid rise of artificial intelligence (AI) at a media forum here on Wednesday.In a video speech at the 12th Asean Plus Three Media Cooperation Forum, Kao warned that AI's "rapid rise raises serious questions about trust, accountability and safety in the media."Kao highlighted Asean’s efforts to "promote responsible AI governance, including the Asean Guide on AI Governance and Ethics, the Asean Responsible AI Roadmap, and the Asean AI Safety Network."He encouraged practical cooperation in content verification, investment in journalists' professional capacity, and the responsible use of AI in newsrooms.He cited the important role of credible and responsible media in strengthening cross-border understanding, supporting social cohesion and advancing people-to-people connectivity.He also underscored the media's growing responsibilities amid the rapid circulation of information and increasing use of AI.He stressed the need to ensure that the development of AI infrastructure was "responsible and safe."Kao said a 10-year plan for the Plus 3 countries — China, South Korea and Japan — was in the works to enable them to forge a strong partnership with Asean built on a "consensus of respect for diversity, [and a] wider effort to make a dynamic and people-centered region amid numerous challenges, including AI."Media executives from the Asean Region echoed the call, recognizing an "invisible wall of misunderstanding and misinformation that has grown thicker and thicker, creating animosity that has increased the divide."Geopolitical tension and emergencies caused by climate change are among the issues that can create misinformation, with media responsible for either "building a bridge of mutual understanding or severing it."Michael Ang, director and board member of The Manila Times and one of the speakers, said “he rapid shift toward digital distribution, platform dominance and the ethical integration of artificial intelligence present challenges no single outlet can navigate alone.""Generative AI tools offer operational efficiency, but they also raise urgent questions about verification, copyright and public trust," Ang said in his speech, which carried the common theme of "Openness and Cooperation for Shared Development.""To build an accountable, future-ready media network across East Asia, we must move toward practical structured collaboration anchored on technical exchange programs on best practices in the newsroom, build collaborative reporting initiatives that protect diversity and elevate underrepresented stories and establish fact-checking networks to counter misinformation," he said.Zosito da Silva, vice president and editor-in-chief of the Tatoli News Agency in Timor-Leste, sought the creation of a "self-fact-checking network" and for stories to come not only from the "big countries" but from the "small countries" as well.Other media executives present were Syvanh Homsayadeth, editor-in-chief of the Pasaxon Newspaper in Laos; Heng Sovann, editor-in-chief, Apsara Media Services; Thanchanok Jongyotying, editor-in-chief, Thai News Network; Han Yonghong, associate editor, Lianhe Zaobao, Singapore; and Kang Miao, deputy director, Xinhua, News Agency Fujian Branch.The 12th Asean Plus Three Media Cooperation Forum and the 2026 Media Cooperation Forum on Belt and Road were organized by the People's Daily, China's English-language newspaper, and Fujian province.

- Corruption top concern of Filipinos — survey (2026-11-04 16:12)

FIGHTING corruption, including the flood control scandal, has overtaken high prices of basic goods as the top issue Filipinos want the government to address, a nationwide survey conducted in October showed.The National Momentum Survey by Momentum Research found that 59 percent of Filipino adults cited corruption as one of the three most important issues the government should prioritize, ahead of the 53 percent who wanted lower prices of food and basic goods.The findings point to a shift in public priorities as the controversy over alleged irregularities in flood control projects continues to fuel scrutiny of government spending and infrastructure allocations.In July, fighting corruption ranked only fourth among issues respondents wanted President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. to address, with 32 percent citing it as a priority.The October survey also found that 40 percent wanted the government to increase workers' wages, while 21 percent each cited combating poverty and hunger and lowering electricity and fuel prices.Corruption was the leading concern among respondents from low-income and middle-income households, cited by 64 percent and 67 percent, respectively.Among poor households, however, 56 percent wanted the government to prioritize lowering food and basic goods prices.Regional findings showed that corruption was the leading concern in Metro Manila and the rest of Luzon, cited by 67 percent and 64 percent of respondents, respectively.In Visayas and Mindanao, the cost of food and basic goods was the leading concern, cited by 59 percent and 54 percent, respectively.In Metro Manila, increasing workers' wages ranked second at 47 percent, ahead of lowering food and basic goods prices at 38.7 percent.The survey also found that younger respondents were more likely to cite corruption as a priority.Nearly seven in 10 Gen Z respondents, or 69 percent, wanted the government to prioritize addressing corruption, compared with 57 percent of millennials, 51 percent of Gen X respondents and 52 percent of Baby Boomers and the Silent Generation.For older respondents, the rising cost of goods remained a more pressing concern. It was cited by 60 percent of Gen X respondents and 64 percent of Baby Boomers and the Silent Generation.The survey was conducted through face-to-face interviews with 1,401 Filipino adults from Oct. 16 to 19. It had a national margin of error of plus or minus 2.6 percentage points at a 95 percent confidence level.Respondents were asked to select up to three issues from a list of 18 national concerns that they believed the government should prioritize.

- PH, China agree on peaceful, responsible dispute resolution (2026-11-04 16:12)

THE Philippines and China have agreed to resolve their disputes peacefully and manage differences responsibly in order to maintain "stable and predictable" relations, the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) said Wednesday.The Philippines "remains committed to a stable, predictable, mutually respectful, and mutually beneficial relationship with China," the DFA said in a statement.President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has repeatedly affirmed that the Philippines "must rely on diplomatic means to resolve disputes and manage differences with other countries, including China," it added.Foreign Affairs Secretary Ma. Theresa Lazaro on Tuesday received a telephone call from Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi, during which they discussed the state of bilateral ties between Manila and Beijing. "The exchange was frank, pragmatic, and constructive, and reflected the interest of both sides in a stable and predictable relationship founded on mutual respect and mutually beneficial cooperation," the DFA said.The two officials shared the understanding that Manila and Beijing should "avoid actions and rhetoric that could needlessly undermine relations or heighten tensions," the DFA said.Meanwhile, the DFA welcomed the joint appeal issued on Nov. 3 by Philippine business and sectoral organizations for the stabilization of Philippines-China relations.It said the appeal served "as a constructive contribution that underscores the value of candor, composure, principled conduct, sound judgment, and measured engagement in the conduct of foreign relations." "The DFA has consistently maintained that diplomacy, dialogue, and mutually beneficial practical cooperation can be pursued without compromising the assertion and protection of the country's sovereignty, sovereign rights, and jurisdiction," it added.Lazaro underscored that good relations between the Philippines and China serve the interests of both countries and of the region.She said the Philippines-China relations "must be sustained through regular high-level exchanges, ministry-to-ministry channels, and the appropriate bilateral and regional mechanisms."The discussion also covered other matters of concern, including maritime issues, "but focused on returning the relationship to an even keel" and on upholding the 1975 Joint Communiqué, which remains the enduring basis of Philippines-China cooperation and of the Philippines' One China Policy, the DFA said.The Foreign Affairs Department underscored that Manila's relations with Beijing are "in accordance with the national interest and in pursuit of an independent foreign policy as enshrined in the Philippine Constitution."

- Student leaders slam social media ban (2026-11-04 16:09)

STUDENT leaders warned that a proposed blanket ban on social media access for Filipinos under 18 could further widen barriers to education by cutting students off from digital learning resources, academic communities, and opportunities beyond the classroom, as the country continues to grapple with a learning crisis.The Student Council Alliance of the Philippines (SCAP) joined student representatives from universities and secondary schools nationwide at a press conference titled "Ban Predators, Ban Groomers, Not Learners" in Quezon City on Wednesday. "For many young people, social media extends learning beyond the four walls of the classroom. Social media helps us stay informed, connect with others, and find learning opportunities," said Edrianna Villaruz, SCAP undersecretary-general.SCAP made clear that it does not take online dangers lightly, acknowledging that cyberbullying, grooming, online sexual exploitation, misinformation and scams are real threats to young Filipinos.It argued, however, that locking an entire generation out of digital spaces does not stop the people who cause harm. "We recognize that young people face risks online, but the answer is not to take away their access to digital spaces that also support their learning and development," Villaruz said. "If a predator is the problem, go after the predator. Don't shut the door on millions of learners," she pointed out.The group stressed that for many students, social media is also where they learn, organize, and find opportunities, with scholarship announcements, academic communities, educational resources, and civic conversations all taking place online.A blanket ban would cut off the very students who rely on these platforms to study, connect and take part in public life, it warned. “For a lot of young people, social media is the classroom after the classroom, and sometimes it is the only one they have,” Villaruz said.Instead of a ban, SCAP laid out a five-point agenda: protect children without punishing responsible young users; keep social media open as a space for learning; strengthen law enforcement and reporting systems against online predators and groomers; hold platforms accountable for privacy, content moderation, age-appropriate safeguards, and abuse reporting; and invest in digital literacy so students can recognize threats and practice responsible digital citizenship.Student leaders from Pamantasan ng Lungsod ng Maynila, Batasan Hills National High School, and Adamson University, along with a representative from the National Federation of Supreme Secondary Learner Government (SSLG) and Student Leaders for Good Governance (SLGG), shared their views on education, online safety and digital rights.Lawmakers, government agencies, and technology companies should work with young people, not around them, in crafting online safety policies that are balanced, rights-based, and youth-inclusive. “Protect the youth, hold abusers accountable, and preserve opportunities for every Filipino student,” Villaruz said.

- Pax Silica deal signed during Asean Summit? (2026-11-04 16:08)

MALACAÑANG hinted on Wednesday that the draft framework for the proposed US-led Pax Silica initiative may be signed during the 49th Asean Summit in Manila.”Let us see,” said Palace Press Officer Claire Castro during a press briefing when asked if President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. would sign the draft framework during the summit.Castro said that the Philippines is still awaiting the response of the United States to the proposed agreement, being the initiative’s leader. The Bases Conversion and Development Authority (BCDA), which oversees the project, said it had already discussed with the president the preliminaries of the endeavor.”The BCDA has met with the Office of the President — through the Office of the Executive Secretary regarding a memorandum submitted jointly with the DTI (Department of Trade and Industry),” Castro said in Filipino, quoting the BCDA.”Guidance has been provided for the BCDA to follow during the negotiations and the finalization of the framework arrangement with the US counterpart. Essentially, we are now just awaiting a response from the US side concerning the draft agreement; that is the message they conveyed,” she added.When asked by The Manila Times on the issue of communities that would be displaced because of the project, Castro said the government will ensure that those who would be affected will receive assistance.”Of course, financial assistance will certainly be provided should anyone actually end up being displaced,” she said.Castro said that only 3,000-plus hectares of the over 6,000 hectares total designated spot for the project are considered a “buildable zone.” ”If they (locals) are located within the buildable zone, they will not be left to fend for themselves or lose their place to live,” Castro said, noting the remaining land outside the buildable areas was reserved for Indigenous peoples.The BCDA said consultation has been done in Capas, Tarlac, on the possible displacement of Aeta communities in the area because of the project.The Palace previously confirmed that US President Donald Trump will attend the Asean Summit, leading to speculations that the Pax Silica deal may be signed during the event.

- Alarm raised on lack of developmental pediatricians (2026-11-04 16:07)

SEN. Joel Villanueva said the country's shortage of developmental pediatricians must be promptly addressed.Villanueva suggested hiring additional consultants and fellow positions in public training hospitals to remedy the shortage.This comes as the Second Congressional Commission on Education (EdCom 2) noted that severe regional disparity in specialists has left hundreds of thousands of public-school learners with disabilities without formal medical diagnoses." These are low-hanging fruit. If we can capacitate these hospitals to train more specialists, maybe we can help expand access to developmental assessment and support services," said Villanueva. The co-chairman of EdCom 2 noted the Philippine General Hospital, Philippine Children's Medical Center and National Children's Hospital as immediate targets for capacity expansion.Data from the Philippine Society for Developmental and Behavioral Pediatrics (PSDBP) showed that as of June 2026, only 109 certified developmental pediatricians operate across 156 clinics nationwide. This nominal workforce is tasked with serving an estimated 5 million learners with disabilities.Compounding the crisis is a stark geographic concentration. Nearly half of the available clinic listings — 47 percent — are located in the National Capital Region. Calabarzon follows with 15 percent, and Central Luzon holds 12 percent. By contrast, the Visayas and Mindanao are left with just 7.7 percent and 9 percent of specialists, respectively. Regions such as Bicol, Mimaropa, Eastern Visayas and Soccsksargen have only one listed specialist each, while Caraga and the Bangsamoro Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao have none.PSDBP Vice President Dr. Lourdes Tanchanco said the country has only five institutions offering the required fellowship training, most of which are in Metro Manila." We can accommodate around two to three pediatricians in each of the training programs," Tanchanco said during an EdCom 2 consultation.This training bottleneck, she said, severely restricts timely interventions. An EdCom 2 analysis of Department of Education data for School Year 2025–2026 revealed that of 492,902 public-school learners flagged as having disabilities, 63.4 percent had recorded behavioral manifestations. Only 36.6 percent have secured a formal clinical diagnosis.EdCom 2 Executive Director Karol Mark Yee emphasized that patient-to-doctor ratios have soared to 1:37,068 in Region 5 (Bicol Region) and 1:24,728 in Region 12 (Soccsksargen). "This is of great concern because learners do not just need diagnosis but also continued support from specialists," Yee said.

- Matobato, Lascañas, Mancao among 3 unidentified ICC witnesses? (2026-11-04 16:06)

COULD self-confessed former Davao Death Squad (DDS) members Edgar Matobato and Arturo Lascañas, and retired police officer Cezar Mancao be among three witnesses whose recorded testimonies the prosecution wants admitted in the crimes against humanity case against former president Rodrigo Duterte before the International Criminal Court (ICC)?The question arose after the ICC prosecution sought permission to introduce the previously recorded testimonies of three witnesses identified only as P-0019, P-1032 and P-1409, whose accounts cover alleged DDS operations, extrajudicial killings in Davao City and Duterte's alleged involvement in the killings.In a public redacted application dated Nov. 3, the prosecution withheld the identities of the three witnesses but detailed their accounts of the alleged death squad's operations, including its targeting of suspected criminals, the use of Laud Quarry as a burial site and alleged financial rewards for killings.Matobato and Lascañas were previously identified as potential insider witnesses in the ICC proceedings.ICC Assistant to Counsel Kristina Conti had said the two could provide evidence on the planning and implementation of alleged DDS operations, the people involved, and how killings were ordered, financed and carried out.However, the prosecution's latest filing does not identify P-0019, P-1032 or P-1409 by name.The prosecution described P-0019's testimony as covering extrajudicial killings in Davao City during Duterte's tenure as mayor, the pattern and widespread nature of the killings, and the atmosphere of fear and impunity in the city.The witness also recounted Duterte's alleged practice of reading the names of suspected criminals on his local television program, "Gikan sa Masa, Para sa Masa," some of whom were subsequently killed, according to the prosecution.P-1032, meanwhile, provided an account of the existence and composition of the DDS, its targeting of suspected criminals and its alleged use of Laud Quarry as a burial site.The witness also recounted being threatened with death and fleeing to another part of the Philippines after being warned that a group had been ordered to kill him.The third witness, P-1409, provided evidence concerning the DDS' alleged involvement in extrajudicial killings from 2016 to 2017.His recorded testimony also discussed alleged financial rewards for killings given by Duterte to DDS handlers through co-perpetrator Sonny Buenaventura.Buenaventura is a retired police officer who served as Duterte's driver and security aide when he was Davao City mayor.He has also been identified by Lascañas as the alleged logistics and finance officer of DDS who facilitated payments for killings.The prosecution said P-1409's account included independent observations that corroborated other evidence concerning killings allegedly carried out pursuant to Duterte's orders.The three testimonies, the prosecution argued, are relevant to establishing the contextual elements of crimes against humanity in Davao City and Duterte's individual criminal responsibility.The prosecution asked Trial Chamber III to admit the witnesses' previous statements, interview transcripts and supporting materials under Rule 68(3) of the ICC Rules of Procedure and Evidence.It also sought permission to conduct one-hour supplementary examinations of each witness, instead of the estimated three hours needed for their direct examinations if the recorded testimonies were not admitted.Granting the request would save at least six hours of court time, the prosecution said.It maintained that admitting the recorded testimonies would not prejudice Duterte's rights because the witnesses would appear in court, confirm their statements and remain available for cross-examination by the defense, as well as questioning by the prosecution, the judges and the legal representatives of victims.The chamber has yet to rule on the prosecution's request.

- Palace: Never stop youth seeking jobs abroad (2026-11-04 16:05)

MALACAÑANG said the government will not prevent young Filipinos seeking a better life abroad from migrating, noting that their success abroad benefits the economy.The Palace’s statement follows a Philippine Institute for Development Studies study finding that the country’s labor supply is at risk, as more Filipinos — especially the youth — are leaving or planning to leave to work abroad because of low wages at home.In response to the study’s findings, Palace Press Officer Claire Castro acknowledged concerns about potential labor losses and job mismatches

but said the administration supports Filipino workers' professional growth overseas. "We should not hinder young people who wish to work abroad," Castro said in Filipino during a press briefing on Wednesday. "Just because they go abroad, it does not mean they can no longer be relied upon. Whatever they earn overseas will help their families, support their personal needs and even contribute to our country's economy," she added.To address underlying issues, Castro noted that President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has directed the Commission on Higher Education, the Technical Education and Skills Development Authority (Tesda), and the Department of Education to sharpen youth training.Through these targeted programs, the government ensures Filipino workers remain competitive whether they build their careers locally or tap international job markets.Addressing questions on whether supporting overseas employment contradicts investment promotion strategies that pitch the country's young domestic workforce as a primary economic advantage, Castro clarified that outflow is not absolute.Castro said that while many young professionals find better career paths abroad, ongoing government initiatives to attract foreign and local investment aim to create well-matched domestic jobs.Rather than restricting freedom of movement, the administration prioritizes upskilling Filipino youth so they can thrive wherever their careers take them, ensuring their capabilities serve as an asset at home and abroad. "While the government works to address these gaps — aiming to attract more investment to the Philippines and create jobs that truly align with the skills of our workforce — we will not hold our youth back. Instead, we will continue to enhance the capabilities of our fellow Filipinos, ensuring that should they choose to work abroad, they are well-equipped to benefit from such opportunities," Castro concluded.

- Truth-telling session to tackle 2 deaths from police operation (2026-11-04 16:04)

THE Drug War Truth Commission late on Tuesday said that the upcoming truth-telling session on Friday, Nov. 6, will tackle two deaths from the same police operation.On Aug. 5, 2017, Christopher de Leon Lazaro and Alberto Umali Paragas died in a police operation in Barangay Sta. Rosa I, Marilao, Bulacan.Marissa Lazaro, Christopher's mother, and Rizza Quiamco, Alberto's sister, will speak in the truth-telling session at the Co Po Ty Audio Visual Room of Adamson University in Manila on Friday at 9:30 a.m. "Lazaro and Quiamco will describe how their families learned of the deaths, what happened next, and their efforts to find answers. Their testimony will place two family perspectives on the same reported operation before the public," the truth commission said. "The Department of Justice case file reproduces police statements describing an alleged attempted robbery followed by an exchange of gunfire. The department's resolution did not independently determine the circumstances of the deaths. It dismissed the complaint against the two men because they had died, but it did not rule on the legality of the operation or on whether any officers bear responsibility," it added.According to the postmortem certificate of Paragas, he had gunshot wounds to the head, trunk and right arm, while the medico-legal report for Lazaro also saw gunshot wounds to the head and left leg, as well as ligature marks on both wrists. "The session will consider these records alongside the families' accounts and the police statements in the Justice Department file," the commission said.The Truth Commission will also broadcast this truth-telling session live on its Facebook page.

- BOC seizes P99.4M ketamine at Clark Airport (2026-11-04 16:03)

COFFEE equipment and cleaning powder turned out to be cover for nearly 20 kilos of ketamine worth P99.4 million in the latest drug-smuggling attempt foiled by Customs authorities at the Clark International Airport.The two shipments, containing a combined 19.89 kilograms of ketamine valued at P99.445 million, originated from Switzerland and Amsterdam and were bound for recipients in Mandaluyong City and Montalban, Rizal, respectively.The BOC-Port of Clark, working with the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA), intercepted the shipments after intelligence from the PDEA Airport Interdiction Unit.One shipment, weighing 9,882 grams, was declared as roasted coffee beans, a coffee machine, and coffee-making equipment. The other, weighing 10,007 grams, was misdeclared as sodium bicarbonate cleaning powder.Both shipments were subjected to physical examination after authorities flagged them for inspection.Laboratory tests subsequently confirmed that the seized substances were ketamine, a dangerous drug regulated under Republic Act 9165, or the Comprehensive Dangerous Drugs Act of 2002, as amended.The latest seizure adds to a growing list of drug-smuggling attempts foiled at the Port of Clark, where authorities have repeatedly uncovered ketamine concealed in seemingly ordinary commercial goods and household items.In October alone, Customs intercepted another shipment containing 4.14 kilograms of suspected ketamine worth P20.7 million from Amsterdam, disguised as a compact ceramic fan and bound for Valenzuela City.Authorities seized the shipment after X-ray screening detected suspicious images.In August, authorities also intercepted 1.675 kilograms of ketamine worth P8.375 million concealed inside a resin rabbit figurine shipped from France.Earlier, in March, Customs seized 6.156 kilograms of ketamine worth P30.78 million concealed in a shipment declared as solar cables from the Netherlands.The drugs were discovered following X-ray inspection and a PDEA K-9 examination.In 2025, the Port of Clark likewise intercepted 5.062 kilograms of ketamine worth P25.31 million hidden inside a wooden cable reel declared as a data cable roll and shipped from Belgium.The recurring seizures highlight how drug smugglers exploit international parcel and air cargo services, using ordinary merchandise and misleading declarations to evade customs inspection.District Collector Jairus Reyes said the Port of Clark would further tighten its inspection measures in anticipation of increased parcel volumes during the holiday season. “We expect an increase in parcels arriving through air express carriers. Thus, we will intensify document checks and physical inspections, while ensuring that our X-ray machines are properly maintained and operational,” Reyes said.BOC Commissioner Ariel Nepomuceno, meanwhile, vowed to sustain the agency's campaign against illegal drugs in line with the directive of President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. “As we expect an increase in shipments this holiday season, we will also tighten our vigilance. We will continue strengthening our inspections and operations to ensure that illegal drugs do not enter the country,” Nepomuceno said.The BOC said it would continue intelligence-driven operations and strengthen coordination with law enforcement agencies to prevent the smuggling of illegal drugs through the country's ports of entry.

• BI stops 2 Filipinos headed for conflict zones abroad (2026-11-04 16:02)

IMMIGRATION officers prevented two Filipino men from leaving the country after discovering they were targeted by suspicious recruitment schemes offering significant payments and high salaries for employment in conflict-stricken areas abroad.Bureau of Immigration (BI) agents intercepted the two passengers in separate incidents on Oct. 24 and 27, amid concerns they would fall victim to illegal recruitment, human trafficking or forced labor.The victims were allegedly lured by overseas job offers promising as much as $27,000 in payments and thousands of dollars in monthly salaries. Immigration officers barred them from leaving the country after uncovering suspicious recruitment arrangements linked to conflict-stricken destinations.In the first case, a former protection agent and security guard who was unemployed told immigration officers that he was recruited through Facebook and later contacted via WhatsApp.He was allegedly promised a $12,000 signing bonus upon arrival and a monthly salary of $2,500. The recruiter also offered to cover his travel expenses and make the arrangements.The second passenger initially claimed he was traveling to Hong Kong for vacation, with a friend supposedly sponsoring his trip.Further questioning, however, revealed that he had also encountered a recruitment advertisement on Facebook before being redirected to WhatsApp, where he was allegedly offered overseas employment with a promised payment of $27,000 and a monthly salary of $3,000.He told immigration officers that he had not spent a centavo for the trip.The BI did not identify the recruiters, employers or specific destinations involved but said the job offers were intended to send the Filipinos to areas plagued by armed conflict.BI Commissioner Joel Anthony Viado warned Filipinos against accepting suspicious overseas employment offers, particularly those promising unusually high salaries and signing bonuses. “No job offer is worth risking your freedom or your life,” Viado said, warning that unscrupulous recruiters could exploit Filipinos’ hopes of earning more money to expose them to armed conflict, human trafficking and forced labor.He said the BI would continue scrutinizing suspicious travel arrangements and disrupting potential illegal recruitment networks to prevent Filipinos from falling victim to exploitation abroad.The two interceptions are part of the government’s efforts to protect Filipinos from human trafficking and illegal recruitment, in line with President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.’s directive.The BI urged jobseekers to verify the legitimacy of recruiters, employers and overseas employment arrangements before accepting offers or leaving the country.

• SSS backs govt drive for one-stop digital services (2026-11-04 16:01)

THE Social Security System (SSS) on Wednesday said it supported the government’s push for more connected and accessible public services by bringing the MySSS Card’s front-facing ID feature and selected member services to the eGovPH superapp.On Oct. 21, 2026, SSS President and CEO Victor Alfonso Limlingan said he and his predecessor, now Department of Information and Communications Technology (DICT) Secretary Robert Joseph de Claro, signed a data-sharing agreement to enable the integration.The partnership came shortly after de Claro’s appointment as DICT secretary, following his tenure as SSS chief, and advances collaboration between the two agencies. “This partnership marks a major step in making SSS services more accessible and convenient for our members. By integrating the digital MySSS Card and key services into the eGovPH superapp, we are bringing social security closer to every Filipino — right at their fingertips,” Limlingan said.Once integrated, members will be able to access the front-facing digital representation of their MySSS Card as one of the identification cards (IDs) available through the eGovPH superapp, Limlingan said. “They will also be able to view their contribution history, total number of contributions, latest membership type, and most recent employer information,” the SSS chief executive said.The state pension fund said these services will help members check whether contributions have been posted and verify their membership and employer information through a shared government platform.Limlingan stressed that the integration reflects the SSS’ commitment to digital transformation and member convenience. “Our members should not have to visit multiple offices or use multiple applications just to access basic services. Through the eGovPH superapp, we are making it easier for Filipinos to check their contributions, verify their membership status, and access their MySSS Card — all in one place,” he said.He explained that the move was part of the government’s broader digital transformation agenda, which sought to connect agencies’ services through a shared digital platform that unifies government services in one application.Both de Claro and Limlingan agreed that the partnership also aimed to expand social-protection access for digital workers, including freelancers and online professionals, by making SSS services easier to find and use online.While members can already access their membership and contribution records through the MySSS mobile app, the integration will provide another convenient way to view these records, along with the MySSS Card ID feature and other government services, the SSS said.The agreement signals that the SSS will be among the government agencies feeding services into the eGovPH superapp, supporting the administration’s goal of integrating all government services into the platform, Limlingan said. “We are proud to be part of this national effort to unify government services. The SSS remains committed to leveraging technology to deliver faster, more secure, and more member-centered service,” he said.

- Lacson: Dela Rosa entitled to due process before local courts if arrested (2026-11-04 15:56)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Panfilo "Ping" Lacson on Wednesday said that Philippine courts must be respected and local legal procedures observed if Sen. Ronald "Bato" dela Rosa is arrested, saying these are essential to ensuring his constitutional right to due process.Lacson said Dela Rosa should be placed under the custody of a Philippine court, even in a ministerial capacity, if authorities apprehend him so he can avail himself of all legal remedies available under Philippine law, including recourse to the Supreme Court."That's part of due process — if he is arrested, he may be placed under the custody of a local court where he can avail of all legal remedies up to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court will be the final arbiter of the law," Lacson said in an interview on DZMM radio.He cited Section 17 of Republic Act No. 9851, or the Philippine Act on Crimes Against International Humanitarian Law, Genocide, and Other Crimes Against Humanity, which establishes the country's jurisdiction over persons suspected or accused of crimes covered by the law under specified circumstances.These include cases in which the accused is a Filipino citizen, is present in the Philippines regardless of citizenship or residence, or has committed the alleged crime against a Filipino citizen.However, the law also allows Philippine authorities, in the interest of justice, to defer investigation or prosecution when another court or international tribunal is already investigating or prosecuting the same crime. Authorities may instead surrender or extradite the accused to the appropriate international court or another state, subject to applicable laws and treaties."No criminal proceedings shall be initiated against foreign nationals suspected or accused of having committed the crimes defined and penalized in this Act if they have been tried by a competent court outside the Philippines in respect of the same offense and acquitted, or having been convicted, already served their sentence," the law read.Lacson also cited Article 17 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC), which provides that a case may be deemed inadmissible before the ICC if it is being investigated or prosecuted by a state with jurisdiction over it, unless that state is unwilling or unable genuinely to carry out the proceedings.The same provision covers cases in which a state has investigated an alleged crime but decided not to prosecute, unless the decision resulted from its unwillingness or inability to genuinely pursue the case.Lacson further invoked Article III, Section 2 of the 1987 Constitution, which protects Filipinos against unreasonable searches and seizures and requires that arrest warrants be issued by judges upon a determination of probable cause.He also recalled signing a Senate resolution expressing the chamber's position that Filipinos should be protected against extraordinary rendition and given reasonable time before their surrender or extradition from the country to seek judicial relief and exhaust available legal remedies."Our local courts should be respected. If he is arrested, he should be placed under the custody of the local court, even if this is ministerial because the local court is not handling his case so it cannot determine his guilt or innocence. It's almost ministerial but just the same, we have our law and it should be respected," Lacson said."Even subpoenas and summonses issued by international or foreign courts must go through Philippine local or regional trial courts, which will issue the corresponding subpoenas and summonses," he added.

• SC drops Romualdez petition to stop Ombudsman’s plunder probe (2026-11-04 11:03)

MANILA, Philippines — The Supreme Court has dropped the petition of former speaker Ferdinand Martin Romualdez seeking to stop the Office of the Ombudsman from investigating his alleged involvement in the multibillion-peso flood control scam, ruling that the petition has become moot after a ₱7.4-billion plunder case was filed against him before the Sandiganbayan.In a press briefing on Wednesday, the SC en banc said there was no longer a need to resolve Romualdez’s petition for certiorari because the Ombudsman already filed the criminal case, and the former House leader has been arraigned and pleaded not guilty.The high court also denied his request for a temporary restraining order and/or writ of preliminary injunction to prevent the Ombudsman from continuing its preliminary investigation.Romualdez had questioned the conduct of the investigation, including the Ombudsman's application for a preliminary hold departure order and freeze order against him, as well as the alleged use of inadmissible evidence.The ₱7.4-billion plunder case stemmed from allegations that Romualdez and former Ako Bicol party-list representative Zaldy Co orchestrated a kickback scheme involving government-funded flood control and other infrastructure projects from 2022 to 2025.The controversy erupted in 2025 after President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. ordered an investigation into alleged irregularities in flood control projects, following revelations of questionable government-funded infrastructure works, including allegedly substandard and non-existent projects.The scandal triggered congressional investigations and a government-wide examination of public works contracts, with contractors, government officials and lawmakers facing scrutiny.

• Ombudsman suspends eight DPWH personnel over Surigao infra projects (2026-11-04 10:09)

MANILA, Philippines — The Office of the Ombudsman ordered Wednesday the preventive suspension without pay for up to six months of eight Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) personnel over alleged irregularities in infrastructure projects in Surigao del Norte.In a six-page order, the Ombudsman said the suspension would remain in effect pending the resolution of administrative cases against the seven engineers and one accountant. "Sufficient grounds exist to impose preventive suspension on Respondents," the order read. "Without delving into the merits of the case and based on the evidence submitted by Complainant, the allegations against Respondents appear to be supported by strong evidence at this stage," it added.Preventive suspension was ordered to prevent the respondents from potentially abusing the authority of their current positions while the administrative cases are being investigated.Those suspended were Annie Dela Vega, DPWH Regional Office XI district engineer; Federico Gotico III, Demilyn Castrence, Quintinano Armendariz Jr. and Edward Tinio, all Engineer III; Florencio Sulana, Engineer II and acting chief of Quality Assurance; Ricky Arciga, Engineer II; and Jerome Sulapas, Accountant III.In August, the Ombudsman recommended the filing of criminal and administrative complaints against the respondents, along with former Surigao del Norte Representatives Francisco Matugas and Francisco Matugas II, over the anomalous ₱80.61-million Mahayhay–Tuburan Road project in Del Carmen which was declared fully complete.The OMB's Field Investigation Office II filed administrative charges of conduct prejudicial to the best interest of the service, grave misconduct, and serious dishonesty following allegations that substantially incomplete projects under the DPWH Surigao del Norte 1st District Engineering Office had been fully paid.Site inspection conducted in April found the project only 65 to 70 percent accomplished. At least ₱31,586,438.91 was released despite its actual condition.The Independent Commission for Infrastructure earlier submitted a list of reportedly completed DPWH projects in the area that were allegedly not fully delivered.

• Asean chief leads call for regional cooperation on 'ethical, safe AI' (2026-11-04 08:20)

FUZHOU, China — Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) Secretary General Kao Kim Hourn led the call for regional cooperation on "responsible governance and ethics, a safety network, and harnessing infrastructure" amid the rapid rise of artificial intelligence (AI) at a media forum here on Wednesday.In a video speech at the 12th Asean Plus Three Media Cooperation Forum, Kao warned that AI's "rapid rise raises serious questions about trust, accountability and safety in the media."Kao highlighted Asean’ s efforts to "promote responsible AI governance, including the Asean Guide on AI Governance and Ethics, the Asean Responsible AI Roadmap, and the Asean AI Safety Network." He encouraged practical cooperation in content verification, investment in journalists' professional capacity, and the responsible use of AI in newsrooms.He cited the important role of credible and responsible media in strengthening cross-border understanding, supporting social cohesion and advancing people-to-people connectivity. He also underscored the media's growing responsibilities amid the rapid circulation of information and increasing use of AI.He stressed the need to ensure that the development of AI infrastructure was "responsible and safe."Kao said a 10-year plan for the Plus 3 countries—China, South Korea and Japan—was in the works to enable them to forge a strong partnership with Asean built on a "consensus of respect for diversity, [and a] wider effort to make a dynamic and people-centered region amid numerous challenges, including AI."Media executives from the Asean Region echoed the call, recognizing an "invisible wall of misunderstanding and misinformation that has grown thicker and thicker, creating animosity that has increased the divide."Geopolitical tension and emergencies caused by climate change are among the issues that can create misinformation, with media responsible for either " building a bridge of mutual understanding or severing it."Michael Ang, director and board member of The Manila Times and one of the speakers, said “the rapid shift toward digital distribution, platform dominance and the ethical integration of artificial intelligence present challenges no single outlet can navigate alone.""Generative AI tools offer operational efficiency, but they also raise urgent questions about verification, copyright and public trust," Ang said in his speech, which carried the common theme of "Openness and Cooperation for Shared Development.""To build an accountable, future-ready media network across East Asia, we must move toward practical structured collaboration anchored on technical exchange programs on best practices in the newsroom, build collaborative reporting initiatives that protect diversity and elevate underrepresented stories and establish fact-checking networks to counter misinformation," he said.

• Lacson: Public anger, vigilance can foil 'pork' insertions (2026-11-04 08:11)

MANILA, Philippines — Public indignation coupled with sustained vigilance could help thwart attempts by unscrupulous lawmakers to insert questionable allocations into the proposed 2027 national budget, Sen. Panfilo “Ping” Lacson said Wednesday.Lacson expressed hope that persons behind the attempts to mangle the budget anew would be proven wrong by the efforts of lawmakers and budget advocacy groups pushing for accountability.“When anger meets vigilance, greed and callousness face a fierce fight. The flood control scandal has barely settled, yet the ‘kapalmuks’ of the world are testing the limits of the people’s patience yet again. I would like to think they are wrong this time... Thanks to the People’s Budget Coalition and all like-minded individuals standing together for accountability,” he said in a social media post.“Anger alone or vigilance alone will not be enough. But combine them and the ‘kapalmuks’ will have something to reckon with,” he added in an interview on DZMM radio.Lacson welcomed moves by some members of the House of Representatives to engage with budget advocacy groups, saying growing public support for their demands for accountability could help strengthen efforts to ensure transparency in the budget process.He also renewed his call for greater transparency in budget deliberations, including keeping livestreams running even during breaks, particularly throughout the proceedings of the bicameral conference committee, where differences between the Senate and House versions of the budget are reconciled.Meanwhile, Lacson said he and his staff continued to scrutinize the proposed spending measure, checking for questionable insertions and determining whether listed projects were viable and had complied with documentary and other requirements.“We in the majority bloc have agreed that there will be no sacred cows. As former Justice Adolfo Azcuna said, all means all. There will be no sacred cows as far as those who made insertions are concerned. If there are projects that cannot be implemented or lack the needed requirements, they will be removed,” he said.Lacson stressed that his efforts to scrutinize the budget were driven by his commitment to honest public service rather than political ambitions.“I am left with no further political ambitions. Whatever I do now is pure advocacy in pursuit of honest public service which I love doing no matter the cost,” he said.

- International parcel scam busted by CIDG (2026-11-04 03:34)

MANILA, Philippines — At least 159 foreigners, mostly Indonesians, Malaysians, Vietnamese and Chinese were rescued during a police operation at a scam hub in Pasay City on November 3.Three masterminds of the parcel scam were arrested.Philippine National Police chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. and Interior Secretary Jonvic Remulla led the raid.Operatives of the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) saw make-believe law enforcement offices of China, Malaysia, Vietnam and Indonesia, and workers disguised as law enforcers, along with their accomplices.Philippine authorities were informed of the scam when three Indonesian workers escaped. “We are now studying the pieces of evidence. The laptops, cellphones and ipads that they used and we will see there the people who were victimized," Nartatez told reporters in an interview on the site after the raid. "And now with the help of Indonesian police and others, we will prosecute them and we will share the necessary pieces of evidence to pursue cases against these personalities especially the masterminds," he said.ModusVarious law enforcement uniforms were found in the scam site during the raid. According to Col. John Guiagui, CIDG-National Capital Region chief, the modus is done in four stages.The scammers choose their victims from their voluminous database and inform them of a parcel delivery which was already paid to lure the targets. However, they will then be told that the parcel contained contraband, particularly illegal drugs.Scripts are prepared in the four Asia languages, which showed that there was no intent to victimize Filipinos since the actors do not know Tagalog.This is where the characters will come in. Lower ranked officers will threaten the target that they will be investigated and their money and assets will be frozen.Higher ranking officers would then come in and offer a way out for the victim by giving them an account number, supposedly secured and guaranteed, where they can send money.Once the money is deposited, the scammers disappear.The group lures workers online through social media and messaging apps like Telegram, offering them virtual assistant work but upon arrival in the Philippines, they will be locked in the building and forced to work.Guiagui said the workers also endured physical abuse.

- Candidates with Filipino roots score victories in Northern Marianas elections (2026-11-04 02:53)

SAIPAN, Northern Marianas — Several candidates with Filipino ancestry won in the Northern Mariana Islands' general election last Nov. 3, including lawmakers tracing their family roots to Pangasinan, Pampanga, Tarlac, and Quezon City.Another candidate with Filipino heritage is poised to advance to a runoff for attorney general.Unofficial results released by the Commonwealth Election Commission on Wednesday showed incumbent Sen. Jude Untalan Hofschneider, whose maternal family traces its roots to Pangasinan, received 806 votes in his uncontested reelection bid on Tinian.Hofschneider, a Republican, was among four candidates with documented Filipino ancestry who occupied winning positions in the legislative elections.In Saipan's six-seat Precinct 3 House race, incumbent Rep. Ralph N. Yumul, an independent, received 1,353 votes, placing third behind Marissa Flores and Elias Rangamar.Yumul, who traces his Filipino ancestry to Pangasinan and Pampanga, previously told The Manila Times that his family's roots in the Commonwealth extend several generations."My Filipino roots are an important part of who I am today. My Naraja side has been in the CNMI for four generations, and my Yumul side for three generations," he said.Yumul said his grandfather migrated from Pangasinan, while his father came from Pampanga."Our family has maintained a strong connection to Filipino heritage and culture, which has shaped my values," he said.Yumul said his legislative priorities include strengthening economic cooperation between the CNMI and the Philippines, particularly in agriculture, food distribution, tourism, and labor protections.He supports efforts to include the Philippines in the Guam-CNMI Visa Waiver Program, which he believes could expand tourism and help diversify the Commonwealth's economy.He also favors strengthening the CNMI's foreign worker program and addressing the disruption caused by the federal touchback requirement, which forces certain foreign workers to leave the United States temporarily before their employers can seek further work authorization.Another incumbent, Rep. Daniel Iwashita Aquino Jr., secured a winning position in Saipan's Precinct 2, receiving 606 votes to finish second behind fellow independent John Paul Sablan, who garnered 670 votes.Two seats were contested in the precinct.Aquino traces his Filipino heritage to his great-grandfather, who came from Tarlac, while his Japanese ancestry comes from his mother and grandmother."My identity is shaped by a rich tapestry of resilience, migration, and deep-rooted cultural values," Aquino previously told The Manila Times."My great-grandfather traced his roots back to Tarlac in the Philippines, embodying the timeless Filipino spirit of hard work, adaptability, and perseverance."Aquino said growing up with Filipino and Japanese influences shaped his commitment to public service, particularly the Filipino values of malasakit or genuine compassion, and bayanihan, or community cooperation."Ang tunay na lider ay hindi lamang nakaupo sa opisina; siya ay lumulusong sa komunidad (A true leader does not stay in his office, he should be seen in communities)," Aquino said, emphasizing that genuine leadership requires working directly with the community.Aquino said his legislative priorities include reducing living costs, supporting small businesses, improving healthcare access, and strengthening infrastructure.He also hopes to deepen CNMI-Philippines ties through direct trade and shipping links, educational partnerships between Northern Marianas College and Philippine universities, and expanded cultural exchanges.Aquino has proposed establishing a Filipino-American community advisory board and strengthening labor protections for foreign workers, alongside regular community consultations.In Precinct 5, incumbent Rep. Angelo Camacho, another independent with Filipino roots, received 958 votes, finishing second behind Democratic incumbent Leila Staffler, who garnered 1,344 votes.Camacho previously confirmed that his Filipino family hailed from Quezon City.The election results put all four lawmakers in position to continue serving in the CNMI legislature, subject to certification by the CEC.Meanwhile, attorney general candidate Michael Evangelista, who has also acknowledged his Filipino ancestry, placed second in the three-way contest with 3,854 votes, or 30.2 percent.Evangelista finished just 18 votes ahead of Jonathan Glass, who received 3,836 votes, or 30.1 percent.Joaquin DLG Torres led the race with 5,073 votes, or 39.7 percent.With none of the candidates securing more than half of the votes, a runoff is expected between the top two candidates following certification of the results.The narrow margin between Evangelista and Glass makes the official count particularly significant in determining who will face Torres in the runoff.In the broader election, former governor Ralph DLG Torres and running mate Ben Jones led the gubernatorial contest with 6,437 votes, or 49.5 percent, followed by independent candidates BJ T. Attao and Edmund Villagomez with 5,043 votes, or 38.7 percent.The third ticket of Lawrence F. Camacho and Edith Deleon Guerrero received 1,537 votes, or 11.8 percent.With neither leading ticket securing the required majority, the gubernatorial election is headed for a runoff.Incumbent US congressional Delegate Kimberlyn King-Hinds also secured a second term based on the unofficial results, receiving 8,194 votes against challenger Galvin Sablan Deleon Guerrero's 4,675 votes.In the legislature, independents occupied 14 of the 20 House seats, compared with five Republicans and one Democrat, while Republicans appeared headed for a five-seat majority in the nine-member Senate.All results remain unofficial and subject to verification and certification by the CEC.

• DPWH backs Senate removal of 295 projects from 2027 budget (2026-11-04 02:29)

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) has thrown its support behind the Senate's decision to strip P8.8 billion in funding for 295 projects from the proposed 2027 National Expenditure Program (NEP).The removal was due to insufficient documentation as the agency escalates its campaign against ghost infrastructure projects, DPWH Secretary Giovanni Lopez said on Wednesday.The move follows a directive from President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. requiring the DPWH to ensure that every project proposed for the 2027 spending plan is backed by supporting documents, Lopez said. “It was very clear from the President himself: No complete documents, no projects,” the DPWH chief said.The issue surfaced after former Public Works Secretary Vince Dizon told the Senate that 295 projects lacked the required documentation from district engineering offices (DEOs) and recommended that they be dropped from the proposal.Lopez affirmed that the reforms launched under Dizon will carry forward, noting that project proponents must now submit an Approved Program of Work and validated geo-tagged photos, among others.They are also required to submit a Certificate of Implementability, and either a Masterplan, Feasibility Study, or Regional Development Council/Local Development Council endorsement—or a Certificate of Non-Objection—before any project can be included in the 2027 NEP, the DPWH said."The strict instruction of President Marcos to us is that no project lacking documents should be allowed to slip through, so that we can ensure our fellow Filipinos will physically and actually feel the projects we implement," Lopez said. "Secretary Vince Dizon made sure that projects included in the government budget must be transparent, which is why we must implement them properly and correctly," he said.

• Pangilinan calls for online dashboard to track El Niño funds (2026-11-04 01:41)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Francis Pangilinan on Wednesday urged President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. to establish an online public accountability dashboard to track government spending and monitor the delivery of interventions as the country braces for the potentially devastating effects of a strong El Niño.The chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Food and Agrarian Reform said the proposed platform should provide Filipinos with timely information on how public funds are allocated and spent, what government agencies are doing to mitigate the effects of the weather phenomenon, and whether these interventions are producing results. “I call on the President to direct the NDRRMC (National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council), through OCD (Office of Civil Defense) and the concerned agencies, to maintain a single, coordinated El Niño action plan with named leads, measurable targets, and regular public reporting,” Pangilinan said in his eight-point action plan. “The backbone of all these efforts is the proper use of taxpayers’ money. The public must know clearly where the funds are going, what the government is doing, and what results these measures are achieving,” he added.The proposed dashboard would consolidate critical information, including weather forecasts, damage assessments, water conditions, priority needs, funding allocations, relief supply inventories and price-control advisories.Pangilinan proposed requiring government agencies to submit updates every 24 hours, 48 hours or weekly, depending on the urgency and nature of the information.The platform should go beyond reporting available resources and track the actual release and utilization of funds, delivery of relief supplies, number of households assisted, completion of farm and water-system interventions, resolution of price complaints, and filing of cases against violators.

- Cagayan Valley to test response to magnitude 8.5 quake in drill (2026-11-04 01:36)

MANILA, Philippines — The government will again test its disaster preparedness on Thursday as emergency responders, local government units and communities simulate their response to a magnitude 8.5 earthquake and tsunami off Cagayan in yet another drill, the Office of Civil Defense (OCD) said.The full-scale exercise in Santa Ana, Cagayan, will simulate an earthquake triggered by movement along the East Luzon Trough, with the epicenter located 180 kilometers southeast of the coastal town.The simulation will be the highlight of the Fourth Quarter Nationwide Simultaneous Earthquake Drill (NSED) on November 5, which aims to assess the readiness of government agencies, emergency responders and communities to deal with a major earthquake and tsunami.The exercise will test the implementation of Santa Ana's Earthquake and Tsunami Contingency Plan and the Regional Disaster Response Plan of the Cagayan Valley Regional Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council.Among the response capabilities to be tested are early warning system activation, community evacuation, emergency telecommunications, search and rescue, mass casualty incident management and the activation of emergency operations centers.The drill will also simulate the management of evacuation camps and internally displaced persons, water search and rescue, management of the dead and missing, and responses to chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear hazards and oil spills.The OCD will lead the exercise in coordination with member agencies of the National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council and local government units.The NSED will begin at 8 a.m., with the ceremonial pressing of the button at 9 a.m. to signal the start of the nationwide "Duck, Cover and Hold" procedure and evacuation drills, followed by the full-scale simulation.Similar earthquake drills and related exercises will be conducted in other parts of the country under the supervision of OCD regional offices.The fourth-quarter exercise will also coincide with the observance of World Tsunami Awareness Day 2026, which carries the theme " Resilience Starts with You."

- Duterte’s lead over Robredo narrows to 7 points in OCTA survey (2026-11-04 01:20)

MANILA, Philippines — Vice President Sara Duterte's lead over former vice president and current Naga City Mayor Leni Robredo in a hypothetical 2028 presidential matchup has narrowed to seven percentage points, the smallest recorded by OCTA Research in its 2026 surveys, as the number of undecided voters continued to increase.Duterte obtained 40 percent against Robredo's 33 percent in the third-quarter Tugon ng Masa survey conducted from September 28 to October 4 among 1,200 adult Filipinos nationwide.The seven-point margin was down from 11 points in the first quarter, when Duterte registered 46 percent against Robredo's 35 percent, and nine points in the second quarter, when the figures stood at 43 percent and 34 percent, respectively.OCTA said Duterte's preference had declined by six percentage points over the three survey rounds, while Robredo's remained relatively stable, ranging from 33 percent to 35 percent.The proportion of respondents who chose neither candidate or did not know whom to vote for rose to 26 percent in the latest survey, from 22 percent in the second quarter and 19 percent in the first quarter.The growing undecided bloc suggests that voters moving away from Duterte have not necessarily shifted their preference to Robredo, OCTA said.Despite the narrowing margin, Duterte remained ahead nationally, with her seven-point lead outside the survey's plus-or-minus three-percentage-point margin of error.The survey results also showed significant regional differences in the hypothetical matchup.Robredo led Duterte in the National Capital Region, with 39 percent against 32 percent, and in Balance Luzon, where she received 49 percent against Duterte's 24 percent.Duterte, meanwhile, maintained a commanding lead in Mindanao, with 71 percent against Robredo's 2 percent. She also led in Visayas, 46 percent to 27 percent.

- Ombudsman meets with restaurateurs, discuss business, regulatory problems (2026-11-03 22:11)

MANILA, Philippines — Ombudsman Jesus Crispin Remulla on Tuesday met with restaurateurs to discuss industry challenges and identify government regulations and processes that could possibly be opportunities for corruption.The meeting was part of the agency’s study on establishing an Investment Ombudsman to address regulatory bottlenecks, protect businesses, and encourage investments. “Let's make a compendium of the problems that we are facing,” Remulla said, as he identified government agencies dealing with micro, small and medium enterprises and asked about processes requiring immediate attention.Representatives of about 1,000 restaurant business owners attended the dialogue and raised concerns, including the proliferation of fake persons with disability (PWD) identification cards as well as problems with tax collection.The proposed Investment Ombudsman would expand the agency’s preventive mandate by identifying systemic problems that expose businesses to corruption and unnecessary bureaucratic requirements.Prior to this, Remulla met with Cebu business owners last month to discuss ways to address difficulties investors face in dealing with government agencies.

- Malacañang urges scrutiny of proposed P7.2T national budget (2026-11-03 22:05)

MANILA, Philippines — Malacanang has urged budget watchdogs and civil society groups (CSGs) to help President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.Tie identify potential "red flags" in the proposed P7.2 trillion 2027 national budget.Presidential Communications Office (PCO) Undersecretary Claire Castro on Tuesday said Malacañang is ready to cooperate with budget watchdogs and CSGs to review the budget to ensure transparency and efficiency in government spending.The Palace press officer urged them to directly submit documents containing potential irregularities to Malacanang. “To those monitoring the budget, if you have a copy of something you noticed and found to be a red flag, just let us know, give us a copy — the PCO itself — because the President will also need this," Castro said during a press briefing."The president's directive is that public funds must not be abused. Public funds should go to the people, not into anyone's pockets," she said in Filipino.Castro cited that the role of budget watchdogs in helping the government ensure the protection of public funds from abuse and corruption. "Budget watchdogs are needed by the government."Castro assured that the president will not allow budget amendments that lack sufficient documentation, clear descriptions, and concrete project bases.She noted that the proposed 2027 budget will still undergo review by the bicameral conference committee and the president's economic team before being submitted to the Chief Executive for his signature.Budget watchdogs and CSGs recently raised concerns over alleged insertions in the House of Representatives' version of the 2027 General Appropriations Bill.The House approved the P7.2 trillion spending measure on third and final reading on October 12.

• Palace denies PH blocked China's participation in ASEAN (2026-11-03 19:06)

MANILA, Philippines — Malacañang denied that the Philippines used its position as host of the Association of the Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) summit to hinder the participation of China.This comes after Beijing accused Manila of "erecting multiple obstacles" to its participation in the ASEAN Defense Ministers' Meeting in Cebu last week.In a press briefing on Tuesday, Palace Press Officer Claire Castro maintained that the Philippines would continue to take a diplomatic approach in dealing with China."No power or position will be used to gain an advantage over anyone," said Castro in Filipino.

• No shoot-to-kill order vs dela Rosa – PNP (2026-11-03 16:18)

THE Philippine National Police (PNP) on Tuesday said that no shoot-to-kill order has been issued against Sen. Ronald "Bato" dela Rosa as security forces press on with their manhunt operations to arrest the fugitive lawmaker. Col. Allen Rae Co, PNP spokesman, issued the statement after Cagayan de Oro Rep. Lordan Suan denied calling for a resolution seeking the issuance of a shoot-to-kill order against the senator."May I remind the public to only share or believe information coming from verified and official sources. Wala pong shoot to kill na inilalabas (No shoot-to-kill order was issued)," Co said.As to claims that police are raiding homes of dela Rosa’s relatives and friends, Co clarified that police operations are being done lawfully.The police intensified manhunt operations after the deadline given to the senator to surrender lapsed on Friday, Oct. 30.The PNP mobilized tracker teams to find dela Rosa, who was ordered arrested by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for alleged crimes against humanity linked to the implementation of the war on drugs under former president Rodrigo Duterte.A P50-million bounty was offered for information leading to the senator’s arrest.The PNP also said dela Rosa is still in the Philippines.The police said photos of dela Rosa in a cemetery in Davao del Sur that went viral on social media were not new. “It’s not true that he showed up,” Co told reporters in an interview on Tuesday.Malacañang said President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has not shown any dissatisfaction in the progress of the manhunt for dela Rosa amid concerns that some policemen loyal to him were helping him escape the dragnet. “Right now, our president does not show any frustration, as long as he sees that our police force and the leadership of the DILG are fulfilling their duties. So, no frustration is being seen,” Presidential Communications Office Undersecretary Claire Castro said in Filipino on Tuesday.Dela Rosa, who was named a co-conspirator of former president Duterte, refused to acknowledge the ICC arrest warrant and went into hiding last year.Meanwhile, Sen. Panfilo “Ping” Lacson said that due process for dela Rosa does not mean shielding him from facing trial before the ICC.He said that the fugitive senator should be allowed to answer the charges against him without risking violence during his arrest.Lacson said his call for due process for his embattled colleague was not an appeal to protect him from the ICC’s jurisdiction, but to ensure that authorities carry out his arrest without bloodshed. “To me, due process means allowing Senator dela Rosa to face trial before the ICC rather than risk violence and, worse, tragedy,” Lacson said.He reiterated that due process is a fundamental right that applies to everyone, including dela Rosa, who served under him in the Philippine National Police and the Presidential Anti-Organized Crime Task Force.Dela Rosa is the subject of an arrest warrant issued by the ICC in connection with killings linked to the war on drugs implemented under former president Rodrigo Duterte.The senator has been in hiding since last year. He briefly surfaced at the Senate last May 11 to vote for Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano as Senate president then fled following a shooting incident. WITH CATHERINE VALENTE

- Ombudsman files cases vs 6 DPWH personnel (2026-11-03 16:17)

THE Office of the Ombudsman said Tuesday it has filed graft and malversation cases before the Sandiganbayan against six Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) personnel and seven private individuals over an alleged P491.9-million road right-of-way scam in General Santos City.The charges involve compensation for 18 parcels of land affected by the construction of the Digos-Makar National Road in Lagao, General Santos City.Former DPWH Region 12 regional director Subair Saro Diron and former assistant regional director Laureano Suan Jr. were among those charged.According to the Ombudsman, the DPWH Region 12 technical working group approved P491,931,120.20 in payments to claimants who were later found to have submitted falsified documents.The alleged scheme involved the use of a 2009 appraisal value of P3,500 per square meter to determine compensation for properties acquired by the government in the early 1990s, resulting in inflated right-of-way claims.Witness Roberto Catapang Jr., who admitted involvement in the alleged fraudulent act in a 2017 affidavit, said the group, “in collusion with respondent public officers,” collected government funds by fabricating and submitting fake documents.The Ombudsman said the charges followed National Bureau of Investigation reports submitted in 2018 and 2019. It also ordered the dismissal of former DPWH Region XII legal officer Ansare Mariga Busran in a separate administrative decision.

- Ease tensions with China, business, labor groups urge gov’t (2026-11-03 16:15)

A COALITION of 24 business, labor, industry and other organizations urged the government to ease tensions with China and pursue a more coordinated diplomatic approach, warning that strained bilateral relations could jeopardize trade, investments, jobs and other Philippine economic interests.In a joint appeal, the organizations called on the Philippine and Chinese governments to exercise restraint, avoid inflammatory rhetoric and resolve disagreements through established diplomatic channels rather than public exchanges.They stressed that the Philippines must protect its sovereignty and sovereign rights under international law while maintaining economic cooperation with China.The groups cited the two economies’ deep trade and investment ties, noting that China and Hong Kong accounted for nearly 30 percent of Philippine international trade, with China accounting for 26.3 percent of exports and 27 to 29.5 percent of imports, based on figures cited in the appeal from the Philippine Statistics Authority for the first semester of 2026.In contrast, the Philippines represents only 0.3 to 0.5 percent of China’s total global trade, they said.The organizations warned that worsening tensions could undermine investor confidence, disrupt supply chains, increase costs and affect businesses, workers, consumers and communities.They also pointed to China’s role as a supplier of essential goods, industrial inputs, machinery, electronics, strategic raw materials and renewable energy technologies supporting Philippine industries and the country’s clean energy transition. “The Filipino people deserve a government that protects sovereignty while expanding prosperity. Entrepreneurs need stable markets; workers, secure livelihoods; consumers, affordable essentials; and farmers and manufacturers, reliable inputs and wider market access. The country also needs investment, technology, energy security, clean energy solutions, and sustained growth. These priorities should take precedence over public exchanges that distract from practical cooperation,” they said.The signatories urged the government to adopt a centralized, coherent and consistent foreign policy, with diplomatic positions articulated by designated authorities through coordinated institutions and established channels.They also called for stronger economic cooperation in trade, investment, tourism, energy security, electric mobility and solar deployment, as well as technology transfer, local production and the creation of decent jobs.At the same time, the groups said the country should pursue strategic diversification by strengthening domestic industries, expanding local manufacturing and developing alternative sources of critical supplies. “Constructive relations with China do not require abandoning Philippine sovereignty, overlooking legitimate concerns, or compromising an independent foreign policy,” the groups said. “Effective diplomacy means defending national interests while avoiding unnecessary escalation.” The organizations said the Philippines should pursue a foreign policy that is principled but pragmatic, resolute but diplomatic, and anchored in protecting sovereignty, economic security and long-term development. “We respectfully appeal to Philippine and Chinese authorities to lower the temperature, restore disciplined diplomatic engagement, and build a stable, respectful, and productive bilateral relationship. Let us pursue principled diplomacy over public antagonism, economic cooperation over avoidable friction, and strategic foresight over short-term political posturing,” they said. “The ultimate measure of diplomacy is whether it protects national interests, prevents avoidable conflict, creates opportunities, and improves the lives of our people — not who prevails in a public exchange,” the groups added.Among the signatories were the Employers Confederation of the Philippines, Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Federation of Free Workers, Philippine Exporters Confederation, Semiconductor and Electronics Industries in the Philippines Inc., and Foundation for Economic Freedom.

- NBI expands probe as more animal dumpsites found (2026-11-03 16:13)

THE National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) said it will expand its investigation into a pet crematorium accused of illegal dumping of animal carcasses, following the discovery of additional suspected disposal sites in Bulacan.The Environmental Crimes Division of the NBI is leading the investigation into Ahjay Paws Aftercare Pet Crematorium in Bacoor City, Cavite, amid mounting complaints from pet owners for alleged improper disposal of animal carcasses intended for cremation.This comes after the remains of 25 dogs and cats were recovered from a vacant lot in Barangay Minuyan Proper, San Jose del Monte City, Bulacan.Animal welfare volunteers from Luna and Furry Siblings subsequently reported finding additional suspected dumping sites in Barangay Minuyan 4 and Minuyan 5, also in San Jose del Monte.The group estimated that around 14 animal remains were found in Minuyan 4 and 30 to 40 in Minuyan 5. The figures have yet to be verified by authorities.NBI Director Melvin Matibag said forensic examinations would be conducted to establish whether the recovered remains came from the Cavite crematorium.He added that the business permit, cremation equipment, closed-circuit television footage, and records documenting the handling and disposal of animal remains of Ahjay Paws Aftercare Pet Crematorium would be reviewed.The NBI is looking into possible estafa charges under Article 315(2)(a) of the Revised Penal Code if evidence is found that the crematorium collected payments for services that were never performed.Bacoor Mayor Strike Revilla ordered the establishment closed on Oct. 31.Matibag urged affected pet owners to submit cremation receipts, certificates, transaction records, and communications with the establishment to help investigators build their case.Representatives of the Philippine Animal Welfare Society and the Animal Kingdom Foundation (AKF) went to the NBI headquarters on Tuesday in response to the call. “AKF is seeking answers and accountability. We are calling on the NBI to conduct a deeper investigation, including the verification of ashes returned to grieving pet owners,” AKF said in a Facebook post on Tuesday. “We hope this encourages more affected families to come forward and file complaints,” it added.The Philippine Veterinary Medical Association (PVMA) on Monday condemned the act. “The incident raises deeply troubling questions about the handling, transport, and proper disposition of animal remains, particularly in light of reports involving a pet afterlife service provider based in Bacoor, Cavite. The circumstances surrounding the incident warrant a thorough investigation and appropriate accountability from all parties found responsible,” PVMA said in a statement. “Pet owners entrust afterlife service providers with something deeply personal: the final care of their beloved companions. This trust carries a profound responsibility. Every animal deserves to be treated with dignity and respect, even in death. Any act of negligence, abandonment, misrepresentation, or failure to fulfill this responsibility is unacceptable,” it added.The Philippine National Police (PNP) urged pet owners who may have been victimized to file complaints and submit evidence to authorities. “Any form of deception that exploits the trust of grieving pet owners is deeply concerning and must be addressed with the full force of the law. We will not tolerate acts that victimize the public and undermine the trust that should exist between service providers and the communities they serve,” PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. said. “Fraud is not measured solely by the amount of money taken, but also by the damage inflicted on the people whose trust has been betrayed. The PNP will support efforts to establish accountability and ensure that all evidence of possible criminal wrongdoing is properly investigated,” he said.Sen. Pia Cayetano said she would file a resolution seeking a Senate investigation into the incident. “Pets are beloved members of many families. As a pet owner, I understand the grief of losing a pet. Many of us observe rituals to give our beloved animals a proper farewell,” Cayetano said in a statement. “Pet owners have the right to demand that their contracts be honored and seek damages for the harm and distress they have suffered,” she said.Sen. Francis Pangilinan, meanwhile, demanded accountability for deceived pet owners, saying it was unacceptable to profit from the grief of families who paid for their animals to receive a proper and dignified final resting place. “It is unacceptable to take advantage of the grief of pet owners who paid to ensure that their beloved animals would have a proper and dignified final resting place,” Pangilinan said in a statement.He said the alleged dumping of animal carcasses could be a violation of Republic Act 9003, or the Ecological Solid Waste Management Act, as well as local sanitation ordinances.The controversy has intensified calls for tighter government oversight of pet crematoriums and other animal aftercare businesses, with Senate President Sherwin Gatchalian seeking a nationwide inspection and audit of service providers.Gatchalian said the inspections should determine whether these establishments were properly licensed, complied with environmental requirements, and observed clear standards of integrity. “The distressing discovery of 29 deceased pets abandoned in sacks in San Jose del Monte, Bulacan, is a blatant violation of environmental and sanitation laws,” Gatchalian added.

- China turns to intl media to promote gains of Belt and Road Initiative (2026-11-03 16:12)

FUZHOU, China — China called on international media to report on the gains and benefits of the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) program to participating countries.At the opening of the 2026 Media Cooperation Forum on Belt and Road here on Tuesday, Chinese officials and business leaders cited the need for global action in what they called “the world’s largest international platform for economic cooperation in terms of scale, reach and impact.” Xian Hui, vice chairman of the National Communist of the Chinese People’s Political Consultative Conference (CPPC), said the BRI, which President Xi Jinping started in 2013, was no longer just focused on development and investment initiatives originally intended to link East Asia and Europe through physical infrastructure.He said it has evolved into “modernist socialization,” which called for a “deeper alignment of development strategies, improving connectivity networks and balancing development with security by providing an environment that would bring peace, prosperity, openness and civilization.” Hu Heping, the executive deputy head of publicity for the department of the CPC Central Committee, said that amid the “rise of conflicts, unilateralism and challenges of copyright infringements,” there was a need to “build a consensus for development, tell stories that benefit people and deepen exchanges of cooperation by building bridges of communication.” Zhang Tao, president of the China National Nuclear Corp.; Wang Jihang, president of the Agricultural Bank of China; Oleg Kopylov, deputy secretary general, Shanghai Cooperation Organization; Miao Jiianmin, chairman, China Merchants Group; Zhao Fei, board member and general manager, China Changan Automobile Group; Xu Siwei, chairman, China Reform Holdings Corp.; and Zhang Wenwu, vice chairman and president, CITIC Group Corp., were among the business leaders who pushed for greater “connectivity” through the media to help boost international cooperation by sharing “people-to-people experiences, cultural and financial integration.” The event brought together over 200 foreign representatives from 100 countries, as well as international and regional organizations, and 182 media outlets and institutions, People’s Daily, China’s English-language newspaper, said.BRI, sometimes referred to as the New Silk Road, is considered “one of the most ambitious infrastructure projects ever conceived.” To date, about 150 countries were known to have signed memoranda of understanding with China.The Philippines became a member of the BRI in 2018 under then-president Rodrigo Duterte, linking Chinese foreign investments to the administration’s “Build, Build, Build” program.The initiative involved proposed and active transport, water and energy projects — such as the Binondo-Intramuros Bridge, the Chico River Pump Irrigation Project, and the New Centennial Water Source (Kaliwa Dam).Under President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., however, enthusiasm for the BRI waned over tensions in the South China Sea.

- OSG to ask court to review unprogrammed funds ruling (2026-11-03 16:11)

MALACAÑANG said Tuesday that the Office of the Solicitor General (OSG) would submit today, Nov. 4, a motion for reconsideration to the Supreme Court on its ruling that the 2024 and 2025 General Appropriations Acts were unconstitutional due to unauthorized increases in unprogrammed funds. “They will file a motion for reconsideration tomorrow,” Palace Press Officer Claire Castro said in Filipino during a press briefing on Tuesday.Castro said she cannot give a definitive answer when asked which specific government programs could be impacted by the court’s decision. “Even if it has been discussed, I cannot provide the details once a motion for reconsideration has been filed,” she said.Solicitor General Darlene Berberabe earlier said that the OSG would clarify if the guardrails set by the Supreme Court were according to the separation of powers of the executive, legislative, and judiciary under the law. Berberabe said that guardrails are important to ensure transparency and accountability in the use of public funds. “The OSG will respectfully request clarification to ensure that the limits and standards set in the decision conform to the separation of these powers under the Constitution,” Berberabe said in Filipino in an earlier Palace briefing. “There is something that the president, in particular, wants to clarify because the execution of the budget will be affected,” she added.Berberabe said she has recommended to the Department of Budget and Management to put on hold the use of the affected funds. “For those that are not covered, we will assist the executive branch in making a determination by providing legal advice,” said Berberabe.

- Palace releases class suspension guidelines (2026-11-03 16:10)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has signed Executive Order No. 130, detailing the rules on suspension of classes, Malacañang said. “Every day of absence from school represents a significant loss; the new executive order aims to ensure that students remain safe and that their education continues,” Press Officer Claire Castro said in a press briefing on Tuesday.The order enumerated three types of suspensions: automatic suspension when specific criteria regarding weather or hazards are met, localized suspensions when local leaders decide to suspend classes based on their situation, and granular suspension, where schools themselves may suspend classes if hazards within the vicinity of the schools are seen. “This grants local governments greater authority to decide which specific areas or schools should suspend classes, based on the actual conditions on the ground,” Castro said. “This allows for more direct action and ensures that the response from local government units is appropriate. Schools will also have the discretion to suspend classes whenever it is truly necessary for the sake of the students, as the safety of the children is always the top priority,” she added.The executive order said that suspension of in-person classes does not automatically mean a halt to learning, as schools are mandated to implement alternative delivery modes and learning continuity measures consistent with guidelines set by the Department of Education, Commission on Higher Education, Technical Education and Skills Development Authority, and the Early Childhood Care and Development Council. “There is a need to rationalize and harmonize the rules governing the suspension and resumption of classes and activities, and on-site work in educational institutions and learning centers due to natural or human-induced hazards, while ensuring uninterrupted delivery of quality education through risk-informed, science-based, locally responsive policies that support learning continuity,” the order read.

- DepEd secures laptops for teachers, staff (2026-11-03 16:09)

THE Department of Education (DepEd) said it has secured 172,654 units of Apple MacBook Neo laptops for public school teachers and administrative staff through a proper bidding process.Each unit, it said, costs approximately P43,000 and comes with a five-year warranty, longer than the standard one-year retail warranty. The procurement price is about P6,900 lower than the MacBook Neo base model’s Philippine suggested retail price of P49, 900.Distribution of the units was set from November 2026 to March 2027. “For the longest time, our teachers have carried the heavy personal burden of buying their own laptops or maintaining outdated equipment just to keep up with lesson plans. Under the vision of President Marcos, we are changing the narrative,” Education Secretary Sonny Angara said in a statement on Tuesday. “We welcome Apple’s participation in this procurement to bring MacBook Neo to our teachers. It isn’t just about handing out world-class hardware with five-year warranties; it’s about giving our educators the best tools, backed by robust training so they can focus on what matters most: teaching our children,” he added.DepEd has so far awarded procurement contracts for 231,725 laptops for teachers nationwide under its computerization program. These include 169,008 MacBook Neo units and 62,717 Windows-based laptops.The deal also covers 3,646 MacBook Neo laptops for administrative officers. “As one example, we recently secured our biggest education deal ever for Mac, with the Department of Education in the Philippines. They’re going to deploy 170,000 MacBook Neos to teachers and staff,” Apple Chief Executive Officer John Ternus said.

- Go pushes full implementation of disaster law (2026-11-03 16:08)

SEN. Bong Go renewed his call for the full implementation of Republic Act (RA) 12076, or the Ligtas Pinoy Centers Act, and the creation of a Department of Disaster Resilience, after the Philippines topped a new global disaster risks survey.The 2026 World Risk Poll conducted by Gallup for the Lloyd’s Register Foundation showed that 80 percent of Filipino adults reported being personally affected by disasters in the past five years — the highest proportion among 140 countries surveyed. Tropical storms were the most cited hazard (52 percent), hitting 67 percent of respondents in the Visayas, while 44 percent of Mindanao respondents reported earthquake impacts. “We cannot prevent every disaster, but we can prepare for them. There must be safe evacuation centers, adequate equipment, a rapid response, and continuous support for the affected families,” Go said.Signed into law on Dec. 6, 2024, RA 12076, which Go principally authored, mandates the construction of permanent, disaster-resilient evacuation centers in every city and municipality to replace makeshift shelters such as public school classrooms. Coordinated by the National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council, constructed by the Department of Public Works and Highways, and maintained by LGUs, these facilities require dedicated sleeping quarters, sanitation, healthcare areas, and emergency power and water systems.Go refiled Senate Bill 173 in the 20th Congress to establish the Department of Disaster Resilience. The proposed Cabinet-level agency would streamline risk reduction, emergency response, and recovery efforts across national and local agencies during large-scale calamities. Go also introduced SB 415 to provide rental housing subsidies for displaced families.

- ‘Evidence vs VP Sara will speak for itself’ (2026-11-03 16:07)

THE evidence presented against Vice President Sara Duterte will stand on its own merit whether or not she will testify in her impeachment trial, a member of the House prosecution team said on Tuesday. “Irrespective of whether the vice president actually presents herself in the proceedings, the staggering weight of the evidence will probably speak for itself," Bicol Saro Party-list Rep. Terry Ridon said in Filipino in an interview.Ridon was responding to Deputy Speaker Janette Garin's assessment that the prosecution could secure the 16 votes needed for conviction even if Duterte refuses to take the witness stand. "Let us see how this trial will conclude. We do not want to preempt the Senate impeachment court on this matter," he said.The prosecution's remaining case, Article II, involves alleged unexplained wealth and inaccurate asset declarations.Forensic accounting expert and lawyer Alexander Cabrera earlier identified approximately P817.87 million in alleged unexplained wealth involving Duterte and her husband, lawyer Manases "Mans" Carpio, from 2022 to 2025. A broader computation placed the amount at about P1.5 billion, which the defense has disputed. "Our hope is that the defense will answer each and every allegation, each and every piece of evidence that has been submitted for the consideration of the Senate impeachment court," Ridon said. "We will see when the vice president takes the witness stand," he added.He likewise cited a recent Social Weather Stations survey showing that 78 percent of Filipino adults considered it important for Duterte to testify. "The surveys are clear. I think a majority of the nation would want to see the vice president there explaining each and every part of her defense, particularly those properties that were not declared in her statements of assets, liabilities and net worth," the lawmaker said.Blanket objectionRidon said the defense team has objected to all documentary evidence submitted by the prosecution, including Duterte's asset declarations and financial records from banks and government agencies. "The defense's formal offer of evidence objections consists of objections to every single piece of evidence submitted by the prosecution for the consideration of the Senate impeachment court," he said in Filipino in an interview.He said the objections covered all statements of assets, liabilities and net worth (SALNs); bank records; insurance documents; Bureau of Internal Revenue records; and Anti-Money Laundering Council documents. "So, that means all the documents, all the SALNs, all the bank records, all the insurance documents, BIR records, AMLC documents, every single piece of evidence is being denied and objected to by the defense," he said.The lawmaker questioned the blanket objections, noting that the defense had participated in the proceedings and cross-examined prosecution witnesses who identified and authenticated the financial records.The prosecution presented testimony from banking officials and financial regulators. "It is somewhat amusing that they have a blanket objection to every single piece of evidence submitted by the prosecution," Ridon said. "I don't think the Senate Impeachment Court will grant their blanket objection because that would mean there would no longer be any evidence available for our trial, and I don't think that is something the Senate Impeachment Court will allow," he added.

- Tighter police ties with LGUs (2026-11-03 16:05)

SENATE President Sherwin Gatchalian on Tuesday called for stronger collaborative ties among school communities, local governments, and law enforcement agencies.The appeal follows a wave of malicious bomb threats targeting major universities in Metro Manila, disrupting academic operations and raising public anxiety. "Amid the various threats to the safety of our schools, it is crucial that we strengthen community involvement in bolstering school security," Gatchalian said. "We can achieve this through the Comprehensive School Safety Act, which we approved in the Senate." Gatchalian's call follows a directive from the National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO), which ordered an intensified bomb threat awareness campaign in Metro Manila campuses.The alert was triggered after several institutions — including the University of Santo Tomas (UST), De La Salle University (DLSU), and Emilio Aguinaldo College (EAC) — received threatening messages that prompted campus evacuations and a temporary shift to remote learning mode.In response, Philippine National Police (PNP) chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. ordered an exhaustive review of explosive-threat response protocols.Concurrently, NCRPO authorities reminded the public that circulating false bomb scares is a severe criminal offense under Presidential Decree (PD) 1727, also known as the Anti-Bomb Joke Law. Violators face up to five years of imprisonment, a fine of up to P40,000, or both.Furthermore, because these recent threats were transmitted online, the PNP warned it will file charges under the Cybercrime Prevention Act (Republic Act (RA) 10175), which raises the criminal penalty by one degree.To build a proactive defense framework against these disruptions, Gatchalian sought the passage of Senate Bill (SB) 2426, or the Comprehensive School Safety Act.The Senate unanimously approved the bill on its third and final reading, and it seeks to institutionalize a permanent National Comprehensive School Safety Framework.At its core, the measure mandates enhanced physical infrastructure and security hardware. The bill strictly requires both public and private schools to integrate upgraded safety screening systems at all campus access points.This includes installing closed-circuit television (CCTV) cameras in common areas, mandating walk-through or handheld metal detectors, and requiring trained security personnel to conduct strict bag checks to prevent weapons and hazardous materials from entering school grounds.Once fully enacted, the law mandates the Department of Education (DepEd) to lead the implementation and regular updating of safety standards alongside local government units (LGUs) and the PNP.Under this system, the PNP will actively assist schools with infrastructure security, screening procedures, and visible campus policing, while LGUs will finance and support localized safety programs. "It is important to ensure the safety of our students so that their studies can proceed smoothly and without interruption," Gatchalian emphasized, reiterating that a whole-of-community approach is paramount to shielding learners from campus terror.

- SKorean fugitives linked to online scams nabbed (2026-11-03 16:04)

PHILIPPINE immigration authorities have intercepted two South Korean fugitives wanted for their alleged involvement in online fraud that reportedly raked in more than 3.7 billion won, roughly $2.8 million (around P160 million).The two suspects, identified as Lee Jaeryeon, 32, and An Intae, 29, were separately intercepted by Bureau of Immigration (BI) officers at Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) Terminal 1 while preparing to board flights to Vietnam.Immigration officers flagged the two after confirming they were subjects of International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) Red Notices issued in connection with criminal cases filed against them in South Korea.BI-Interpol acting chief Peter De Guzman reported the interceptions to Immigration Commissioner Joel Anthony Viado, who ordered the bureau to place the two foreigners on its blacklist to prevent their return to the Philippines.Investigators accused Lee of working as an agent and operator for a romance scam syndicate based in Sihanoukville, Cambodia.In 2024, Lee allegedly targeted people who responded to the group’s advertisements on Facebook and other social media platforms, building romantic relationships with unsuspecting victims before directing them to a fraudulent website.Victims were then allegedly made to pay charges, including so-called verification and “woman’s choice” fees, with the money collected by the website’s administrator.An, meanwhile, was allegedly involved in a stock investment scam that used fake websites and social media platforms, including KakaoTalk and Instagram, to lure investors with fraudulent investment opportunities.Authorities said victims were persuaded to deposit money into bank accounts owned or controlled by An and his accomplices.The latest interceptions underscore the growing reach of Southeast Asia-based online fraud networks, which exploit social media, fake investment platforms and fabricated romantic relationships to defraud victims across borders.The Philippines has repeatedly encountered foreigners allegedly involved in similar operations, prompting intensified immigration and law enforcement operations against online scam hubs and fugitives.In March 2026, the BI reported intercepting another South Korean, Kim Kwangsin, at NAIA Terminal 3 as he tried to fly to Taipei.Kim was wanted over an alleged stock investment scam syndicate operating in Cambodia that reportedly defrauded at least 57 victims, mostly South Koreans, of more than 3.5 billion won.In May 2026, the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) also dismantled an alleged online love-scamming and cryptocurrency fraud operation in Parañaque City, arresting 17 people, including three foreigners.Investigators said the operation used fake online identities, dating applications, and deceptive romantic approaches to gain victims’ trust and induce them to send money.On July 21, 2026, the NBI announced the arrest of a Nigerian allegedly involved in an online love scam, following an investigation into the sale of pre-registered SIM cards to suspected operators of scam hubs and other cybercriminals.Viado said the BI would not allow the Philippines to become a transit point or refuge for foreign nationals wanted for transnational crimes. “Fraud syndicates operate across borders, and our response must be just as coordinated. We will not allow individuals linked to these criminal networks to pass through our airports unchecked or use the Philippines to evade accountability,” he said.The two South Koreans are currently detained at the BI detention facility in Taguig City pending deportation proceedings.

- Belmonte: QC contributed P1.4T to economy (2026-11-03 16:02)

QUEZON City Mayor Joy Belmonte on Tuesday said the local government contributed P1.4 trillion to the national economy in 2025, accounting for roughly 6 percent of the country's gross domestic product.Belmonte told The Manila Times that she reported this to her constituents at her State of the City Address early last week, where she also presented stringent measures that effectively cut red tape and simplified government transactions.She praised her co-workers at City Hall, particularly the local department and bureau heads led by City Treasurer Edgar "Edvil" Villanueva, for their dedication and competence, which led to record-breaking revenue collections. “Fewer forms, easier payments, and documents delivered straight to business establishments are the results of these efforts,” said the mayor, citing the city's key role as a major engine of the Philippine economy.Ranking first among all cities in the country in revenue collection for 2025 and surpassing its previous years' figures, Quezon City is home to more than 70,000 registered businesses.Belmonte reiterated that the city government is building on this momentum by reducing paperwork, connecting government systems, and making services more accessible to business owners.She said QC was the first local government unit (LGU) to integrate with the Philippine Business Hub, eGovPH, and the Department of Trade and Industry's Business Name Registration System. “These linkages help streamline registration and eliminate the need to submit the same information to multiple government offices,” Belmonte said.A recent agreement with the Bureau of Fire Protection would further simplify applications for Fire Safety Inspection Certificates. By year-end, the BFP could retrieve information directly from the city's online business permit applications, reducing duplicate data entry, she said.Extending digital payments to its 142 villages, Belmonte said that under its barangay e-payment ordinance, each village will have an electronic payment system linked to the city's online business permit system.These reforms build on QC BizEasy for business registration, QC Pay Easy for electronic payments, and QC Delivers, which has delivered more than 289,000 official documents to establishments, sparing business owners trips to City Hall.The mayor said these efforts have earned Quezon City Hall of Fame recognition as the Most Business-Friendly LGU from the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, as well as a Gold Asia-Pacific Stevie Award for Innovation in Government earlier this year."We will continue to break barriers, modernize our services, and build an environment where businesses can grow with confidence, because when our businesses succeed, our people succeed," Belmonte vowed.

• Staggering evidence vs VP Sara will speak for itself — Ridon (2026-11-03 08:31)

MANILA, Philippines — The evidence presented against Vice President Sara Duterte will stand on its own merit whether or not she testifies in her impeachment trial, a member of the House prosecution team said on Tuesday.“Irrespective of whether the vice president actually presents herself in the proceedings, the staggering weight of the evidence will probably speak for itself,” Bicol Saro Party-list Rep. Terry Ridon said in Filipino in an interview.Ridon was responding to Deputy Speaker Janette Garin's assessment that the prosecution could secure the 16 votes needed for conviction even if Duterte refuses to take the witness stand.“Let us see how this trial will conclude. We do not want to preempt the Senate impeachment court on this matter,” he said.The prosecution's remaining case, Article II, involves alleged unexplained wealth and inaccurate asset declarations.Forensic accounting expert and lawyer Alexander Cabrera earlier identified approximately P817.87 million in alleged unexplained wealth involving Duterte and her husband, lawyer Manases “Mans” Carpio, from 2022 to 2025. A broader computation placed the amount at about P1.5 billion, which the defense has disputed.“Our hope is that the defense will answer each and every allegation, each and every piece of evidence that has been submitted for the consideration of the Senate impeachment court,” Ridon said.“We will see when the Vice President takes the witness stand,” he added.He likewise cited a recent Social Weather Stations survey showing that 78 percent of Filipino adults considered it important for Duterte to testify.“The surveys are clear. I think a majority of the nation would want to see the Vice President there explaining each and every part of her defense, particularly those properties that were not declared in her statements of assets, liabilities and net worth,” the lawmaker said.Meanwhile, Ridon said the prosecution expects a shorter defense presentation following the withdrawal of three impeachment articles on October 13, leaving unexplained wealth as the sole remaining charge.“Our expectation is that they will need less time to present their evidence on this matter,” he said, adding that the prosecution expects the defense to submit its witness list by Wednesday or Thursday ahead of the trial's resumption on November 9.

• Marcos recalls scary childhood experiences at Baguio Mansion (2026-11-02 18:04)

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. recalled his spooky childhood memories of visiting the Baguio Mansion House.In a statement during All Souls' Day on Monday, Marcos said the haunting experiences were not limited to visitors but also to those who lived and worked inside the mansion. "When we were young, we used to go there during Holy Week. Perhaps—I don't know, maybe it was just our imagination—but it really felt like we were sensing something," Marcos said in Filipino. "Those who lived there—especially the caretakers—would say themselves that they truly sensed things, heard things, and experienced events that they couldn't quite explain," he added

• PHIVOLCS warns of possible Mayon Alert Level 4 escalation (2026-11-02 18:01)

MANILA, Philippines — Following Mayon Volcano's recorded explosive eruption, the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology (PHIVOLCS) warned of a possible upgrade to Alert Level 4 after continued signs of heightened volcanic activity.In an interview with state-run media PTV's "Bagong Pilipinas Ngayon" program on Monday, PHIVOLCS Director Dr. Teresito Bacolcol said that while the volcano remains under Alert Level 3, volcanic activity has persisted, including a minor strombolian activity observed at dawn lasting 41 seconds with a plume reaching 300 meters above the crater. "We also monitor what we call RSAM—or Real-Time Seismic Amplitude Measurement—which measures the average strength of recorded seismic signals over a set interval," he said in both English and Filipino. "These are the indicators we look at to determine if the situation might escalate—potentially requiring us to raise the alert level to 4. However, based on what we are seeing right now, it remains at alert level 3," he added.On October 30, Mayon Volcano had a moderate eruption which prompted the agency to raise the status to Alert Level 3.

• MNLF denies giving refuge to dela Rosa (2026-11-02 16:16)

THE Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) has denied harboring Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, saying the claim it was providing refuge to the fugitive lawmaker was "speculation, not a confirmed fact." The MNLF's denial came as the Philippine National Police (PNP) intensified its manhunt for dela Rosa following the lapse of a one-week deadline for his surrender and the government’s offer of a P50-million reward for information leading to his arrest.In a statement dated Oct. 30, the MNLF said it has no formal relationship with dela Rosa. “The claim that the MNLF may be protecting him is speculation, not a confirmed fact,” the group said.The group acknowledged that dela Rosa had personal and political connections to figures associated with the organization, particularly through former president Rodrigo Duterte’s relationship with MNLF founder Nur Misuari.But it stressed that such connections did not establish that the senator was an MNLF member, an operational ally or someone currently under its protection.The group also pointed to divisions within the MNLF, saying it remained uncertain whether Misuari’s faction would be willing or able to prevent dela Rosa’s arrest.The senator has been out of public view since leaving the Senate on May 14, when authorities tried to serve him an arrest warrant from the International Criminal Court (ICC) over alleged crimes against humanity linked to the Duterte administration’s war on drugs.Interior and Local Government Secretary Jonvic Remulla said on Oct. 20 dela Rosa was in Mindanao under the protection of a powerful armed group.Remulla warned that a forcible arrest could trigger a bloody confrontation and that as many as 10,000 people could die.Remulla did not identify the group or disclose the specific location where dela Rosa was allegedly hiding.He said he preferred to negotiate the senator’s arrest to prevent a potentially deadly confrontation.LtGen. Wilson Lopez, PNP deputy chief for administration and head of the task force leading the manhunt for dela Rosa, said Remulla’s claim was being validated.Remulla announced the P50-million reward for information on dela Rosa’s arrest, declaring him “armed and dangerous.” He said the reward was intended to boost efforts to locate the senator.The PNP has organized task groups in all 18 police regions and deployed tracker teams to go after dela Rosa.The National Bureau of Investigation said it was coordinating with the PNP and the Department of the Interior and Local Government in efforts to track down the senator.The MNLF said dela Rosa’s public references to the organization had largely concerned the conflict in Marawi and peace-building initiatives.As a student in Marawi, dela Rosa had experienced fighting between government forces and the MNLF, it said.He had also supported programs benefiting former combatants and their children.The MNLF cited his advocacy for the faster integration of qualified MNLF and Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) members into the police and the military.It said these activities reflected policy-level engagement rather than evidence of personal or organizational ties.The MNLF acknowledged reports that Misuari and dela Rosa knew each other personally, but they did not prove that the organization was harboring the senator.

- Senate majority united in purging budget (2026-11-02 16:15)

THE Senate majority bloc is united in stripping the proposed P7.2 trillion 2027 national budget of questionable and corruption-prone allocations, including projects inserted by lawmakers without proper vetting, Sen. Panfilo Lacson said.In a social media post, Lacson said the majority was all for weeding out unwarranted allocations and ensuring transparency at every stage of the budget-making process. “The majority of senators are rallying behind Senate Finance Committee Chairman JV Ejercito’s efforts to cleanse the 2027 budget of unwarranted, whimsical, and corruption-prone items,” Lacson said.Over the weekend, Ejercito secured a commitment from the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) to strike out infrastructure projects without complete supporting documents from the House-approved budget bill before plenary debates, unless the agency submits the required papers by Nov. 3.Budget advocacy groups had flagged the lack of supporting documents in the House version of the proposed spending measure.A Senate review found that the number of DPWH projects had increased from 11,420 in the National Expenditure Program, the executive branch’s original spending proposal, to 16,244 in the House-transmitted General Appropriations Bill.Of these, 6,271 projects were introduced by lawmakers without prior vetting by the executive branch, raising questions about how the additional infrastructure allocations were selected, evaluated and justified.Ejercito also said civil society organizations would be invited to observe the bicameral conference committee’s budget deliberations, where the Senate and House of Representatives reconcile their versions of the spending measure.The proceedings would also be livestreamed to allow the public to monitor discussions and proposed changes.The transparency measures are part of efforts to prevent the return of questionable budget practices, particularly the insertion of projects and allocations outside the regular planning and evaluation process.Lacson said the Senate majority had agreed to uphold transparency in the budget process by adopting reforms introduced by former Senate finance committee chairman and now Senate President Sherwin Gatchalian.The Senate has also been pushing for tighter controls on unprogrammed appropriations — standby funds that may be released only when specific legal conditions are met.The Supreme Court has previously struck down certain provisions governing such appropriations.Lacson said senators were taking a “gung-ho” or united approach to scrutinizing questionable allocations in the House version, and that no one would be spared, including lawmakers considered close to President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.Asked in an interview on One News whether the Senate’s scrutiny would extend to the congressional district of presidential son and Ilocos Norte Rep. Sandro Marcos, who recorded the largest net increase in public works allocations in the House-approved budget, Lacson replied: “Yes, absolutely.” He said he was not aware of any member of the majority bloc attempting to insert favored projects into the proposed budget.The Senate will resume plenary sessions on Nov. 9, when debates on the proposed 2027 budget are expected to begin.It hopes to approve the spending bill in time for President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. to sign the measure by the second week of December.Ejercito said the Senate aims to submit its committee report on the proposed budget on Nov. 9, with plenary debates scheduled from Nov. 23 to Dec. 1.He said the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte, budget deliberations and other official commitments had made the legislative calendar particularly challenging.Ejercito said he had discussed the budget timeline with his counterparts in the House to find common ground before the bicameral conference committee deliberations.Among his priorities are restoring funding for foreign-assisted infrastructure projects and the Health Facilities Enhancement Program, which he said had suffered substantial cuts.Delays in foreign-assisted projects could slow down infrastructure development and job creation, Ejercito said.He also wants to improve provincial and locally operated hospitals, many of which he said were overcrowded and needed additional support and facilities. “My advocacy is infrastructure development. We do not want foreign-assisted projects or other nation-building initiatives to be delayed. We are already lagging behind our neighboring countries," he said.Ejercito stressed the need for a comprehensive master plan to guide infrastructure spending and ensure that public funds support projects with long-term national benefits.He said district-level projects should complement national priorities, particularly major infrastructure initiatives involving flood control and road development.On Monday, Navotas Rep. Toby Tiangco backed Ejercito's call for complete documentation and justification of 6,271 infrastructure projects added by the House to the proposed 2027 budget. "I fully support Senator JV Ejercito. Every peso included in the national budget must have a clear justification, complete documentation, and someone who can be held accountable. Projects cannot simply be inserted without sufficient explanation," Tiangco said in Filipino in a statement.Tiangco, who voted against the House-approved 2027 budget over transparency and accountability concerns, said Congress must be able to justify every allocation it approves. "If we cannot explain why a project is needed, why it is a priority, and how it will be implemented, why should we fund it?" he said.Tiangco has made public the proposed infrastructure projects and corresponding allocations for his city, urging other lawmakers to adopt the same disclosure standard.He warned that questionable allocations could come at the expense of essential public services, stressing the need for stricter scrutiny of taxpayers' money. "Transparency is how we prevent corruption. Accountability is how we make sure it doesn't happen again. If we are serious about cleaning up the national budget, every project must be explainable and every peso must be accounted for," Tiangco said.

- Pangilinan calls for price freeze, crackdown on hoardersPangilinan calls for price freeze, crackdown on hoarders (2026-11-02 16:14)

TO prepare for a severe El Niño, Sen. Francis Pangilinan on Monday urged the government to automatically freeze prices in areas placed under a state of calamity and intensify its crackdown on hoarders, profiteers and cartels.In a statement, Pangilinan called on the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI), Department of Agriculture (DA), Department of Health and Price Coordinating Council to step up market monitoring, enforce price controls, and recommend price ceilings to protect consumers from unreasonable increases. "We must not allow anyone to profit from an impending calamity at the expense of Filipinos who are already struggling, particularly farmers and fisherfolk who also have to buy food in the markets. During a crisis, consumers must be protected from exploitation," he said.He cited Section 6 of Republic Act 7581, or the Price Act, as amended by Republic Act 10623, which sets an automatic price freeze on basic necessities in areas declared under a state of calamity.Under the law, prices are generally frozen at their prevailing levels for the duration of the condition that triggered the declaration, but for no more than 60 days.For wholly imported and deregulated basic necessities, such as household liquefied petroleum gas and kerosene, the price freeze is limited to 15 days, taking into account existing inventory and supply levels.Pangilinan, chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Food and Agrarian Reform, said government agencies and law enforcement authorities must also go after individuals and companies involved in hoarding, profiteering and cartel activities during periods of drought and water shortages.Section 5 of the Price Act prohibits hoarding, profiteering and cartels involving basic necessities and prime commodities.Pangilinan said the crackdown “must not end with frontline sellers. We must target those at the very top.” “If we go after only small retailers, our efforts will be meaningless. We must hold big business operators, owners and the masterminds behind syndicates involved in hoarding and price manipulation accountable,” he said.Under the Price Act, illegal price manipulation is punishable by imprisonment of five to 15 years and a fine ranging from P5,000 to P2 million.Violations of automatic price freezes or mandated price ceilings are punishable by imprisonment of one to 10 years, a fine of P5,000 to P1 million, or both.Pangilinan also warned that public officials who conspire in or knowingly conceal violations of the law could be held accountable.He said consumer protection must go hand in hand with safeguarding food production and the livelihoods of farmers and fisherfolk, who are particularly vulnerable to prolonged droughts and water shortages. “We know that a severe El Niño is approaching, so there is no reason for us not to prepare for its effects. It is time to be proactive rather than reactive. Our people will once again suffer if we fail to take the right, effective and immediate action,” Pangilinan said.He urged the DA, National Irrigation Administration, concerned water agencies and utilities, and LGUs to repair and maintain irrigation facilities, communal water systems, pumps and distribution lines, while publishing irrigation schedules and water-supply advisories.Pangilinan said the Declaration of State of Imminent Disaster Act (RA 12287) sets contingency plans to mitigate damage to agricultural products and the food supply in areas declared under a state of imminent disaster.The Philippine Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Act of 2010 (RA 10121), meanwhile, provides for the programming or reprogramming of funds for the repair and safety upgrading of public infrastructure and facilities following a declaration of a state of calamity.

- ICC expects Duterte to attend trial daily (2026-11-02 16:13)

THE International Criminal Court (ICC) on Monday said it expects former president Rodrigo Duterte to attend his trial for crimes against humanity daily when it opens on Nov. 30.Presiding Judge Joanna Korner said the chamber had allowed Duterte to skip Monday’s status conference in his case. “Once the actual trial starts, we will expect, as we said, attendance on a daily basis,” Korner told the parties during the open session.The chamber also agreed to allow Duterte’s defense team to outline its position at the start of the trial, even if it does not deliver a formal opening statement.Korner said Duterte’s counsel, Peter Haynes, could explain the defense’s position to the public before the prosecution and the Common Legal Representatives of Victims deliver their opening statements.The arrangement would not prevent the defense from making an opening statement at the beginning of its case, although the chamber may shorten the time allotted for it.Haynes said he was inclined to make an opening statement at the start of the trial, citing Duterte’s status and the nature of the case.He said the defense would finalize its position within the next few days.The prosecution said it was working to reduce its opening statement from six hours to about three hours.The victims’ representatives also plan to deliver an opening statement after the prosecution. Their counsel, Paolina Massidda, said the team was working on shortening its presentation.During the same hearing, the chamber rejected a request by the victims' representatives to use Tagalog for limited portions of their opening statement.Massidda told the judges that the team wanted to quote portions of victims' accounts in Tagalog to help Filipino victims following the proceedings connect with the experiences being presented to the court.She said the use of Tagalog would be limited to about 15 to 20 minutes of the overall presentation, with individual passages lasting only a minute or two.Korner said the Rome Statute identifies English and French as the ICC's working languages and that exceptional grounds would be needed to permit the use of another language.She noted that not all victims speak Tagalog, with some using other Philippine dialects.The judge said the court would ensure interpretation of the proceedings and consider whether Tagalog translations or transcripts could be made available on the ICC website.The chamber affirmed that the opening statements must be delivered in English, citing the court's language requirements and concerns that allowing exceptions could lead to additional requests, greater complexity and higher costs.Duterte faces three counts of crimes against humanity involving murder and attempted murder in connection with killings allegedly committed during his term as Davao City mayor and president.The charges cover alleged killings in Davao City between 2013 and June 2016, killings of so-called high-value targets nationwide from July 2016 to July 2017, and killings during barangay "clearing" operations from July 2016 to September 2018.Duterte was turned over to the ICC in March 2025 and is being held at the court's detention center in The Hague, the Netherlands.He has denied the allegations.

- Senate urged to probe slay of 'green warriors' (2026-11-02 16:12)

SEN. Jinggoy Estrada wants the Senate to investigate the killings of environmental defenders in the Philippines, which Global Witness has again ranked as Asia's deadliest country for people protecting land, natural resources and communities.In Senate Resolution 697, Estrada urged the appropriate Senate committees to examine the findings of the Global Witness 2026 report and determine what legislative measures are needed to protect environmental defenders and ensure that perpetrators are held accountable. "We must not turn a blind eye, especially as these killings continue. Ordinary people are simply defending their land, livelihoods and the environment, yet they end up losing their lives. This should never happen," Estrada said.The report identified the Philippines as the deadliest country in Asia for environmental defenders for the 13th consecutive year. It documented at least 124 land and environmental defenders killed worldwide in 2025.The Philippines recorded 12 killings, the highest number outside Latin America, tying with Honduras for the third-highest total globally, behind Colombia with 39 and Brazil with 26.Of the 12 victims in the Philippines, six were Indigenous people, three were small-scale farmers and one was a journalist.Environmental defenders include individuals and communities who peacefully protect land rights, natural resources and the environment. They include Indigenous leaders, farmers, journalists and community advocates who speak out against activities they believe threaten their land, livelihoods or surroundings.Global Witness noted that land disputes were linked to more than half of the killings recorded worldwide in 2025. Mining, logging and agribusiness interests were also identified as contributing factors in attacks against defenders.The report flagged five killings in the Philippines in which members of the military were suspected of involvement. One of the cases cited was that of 65-year-old farmer Veronico Anterio, who was allegedly shot dead by soldiers after speaking out against restrictions on residents' working hours and movement.Global Witness also raised concerns over the use of criminalization and "red-tagging" — the practice of labeling individuals or groups as communist insurgents or terrorists — which exposes environmental advocates to threats, harassment and other forms of reprisal.The Commission on Human Rights has warned about the continuing threat posed by red-tagging. Following a nationwide inquiry in 2025, the commission called for stronger government action to protect human rights defenders, citing the practice of publicly labeling individuals and organizations as communists, terrorists or enemies of the state, often without due process.From 2012 to 2024, Global Witness recorded a total of 306 killings and disappearances in the Philippines.The organization cautioned that its figures may underestimate the actual scale of violence because attacks can go undocumented or remain difficult to verify, particularly in areas where conflict, restrictions on civic space and limited independent monitoring hamper investigations.Estrada said the figures tarnished the country's international reputation, particularly given its commitments under international human rights agreements, and pointed to shortcomings in protecting Filipinos from violence.He said the proposed Senate inquiry would allow lawmakers to scrutinize the report's findings, assess whether existing safeguards are adequate and identify gaps in the law that leave environmental defenders vulnerable to violence and intimidation. "More than a decade has passed, yet the killings continue. Those responsible must be held accountable, and justice must be served for the victims and their families," Estrada said.

- Puno backs Marquez's bid for chief justice post (2026-11-02 16:11)

THE next chief justice must be able to work beyond the Supreme Court and coordinate with other branches of government to speed up the delivery of justice, retired Chief Justice Reynato Puno said in endorsing Associate Justice Jose Midas Marquez for the top post in the judiciary.In a letter to President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. dated Oct. 14, Puno said Marquez's extensive administrative background, familiarity with the Supreme Court's internal operations and experience coordinating with other branches of government make him a strong candidate to lead the judiciary.Puno stressed that the country's mounting challenges require a coordinated, whole-of-government approach, including in the delivery of justice."Our problems today need the whole nation approach, and we need officials like Justice Marquez who can work out the speedy delivery of justice to our people in seamless coordination with the Executive and Legislative branches of our government," Puno said. Puno, who served as chief justice from December 2006 to 2010, said he had personally witnessed Marquez's work ethic and professional competence during his 17 years at the Supreme Court.When Puno assumed the chief justice post in December 2006, Marquez served as his chief of staff while concurrently holding key positions as assistant court administrator, head of the Public Information Office and Supreme Court spokesman.Puno said Marquez performed these responsibilities with consistent excellence. Marquez has served the Supreme Court for 30 years, including about 12 years as court administrator before becoming an associate justice five years ago.His extensive administrative experience has given him an intimate understanding of the Judiciary's operations, particularly the internal processes and management demands involved in running the country's highest court, Puno said." More than any aspirant, Justice Marquez is most familiar with how the Supreme Court works, especially its internal processes," he added.Beyond his experience within the Judiciary, Puno highlighted Marquez's exposure to inter-branch relations through assignments that required him to coordinate with officials of the Executive and Legislative departments.He described Marquez as possessing "cerebral competence, compassionate heart and unquestionable dedication to public service." Puno also expressed confidence that Marquez enjoys the trust and respect of the Judiciary's various components, including Supreme Court justices, judges and court personnel."Given all his qualifications vis-à-vis the other aspirants, I am certain that Justice Marquez can lead the Judiciary to higher heights of achievements, for he is beloved by all its components, the Justices, the Judges and the Court Personnel," Puno said.He told Marcos that endorsing Marquez was not simply a privilege but a responsibility in the interest of the Filipino people."Mr. President, I do not only consider it a privilege but a duty to endorse Justice Midas P. Marquez as the next Chief Justice, as it is the demand of the greatest interest of our people," he said.Marquez is among the possible successors to Chief Justice Alexander Gesmundo, whose retirement will pave the way for the selection of the Supreme Court's next leader through the Judicial and Bar Council (JBC) nomination process.

- BRP Sierra Madre: Eight decades of service (2026-11-02 16:09)

THE Philippine Navy's BRP Sierra Madre, an aging warship that has served as a military outpost at Ayungin Shoal for more than 27 years, carries a legacy of service spanning generations of Filipino servicemen who have stood watch in the West Philippine Sea, often far from their families.As the country observed All Souls' Day, the vessel's 82-year history offers an occasion to remember those who served aboard it and have since passed away, honor those who continue to defend the country's maritime interests, and recognize the families who have supported them through years of separation and uncertainty.Originally commissioned as USS LST-821 on Oct. 27, 1944, the landing ship tank was built during World War II, when vessels of its class transported troops, vehicles and supplies for amphibious operations.The ship was transferred to the Philippines in 1976 and became part of the country's naval fleet as BRP Sierra

Madre.More than two decades later, on May 9, 1999, it was deliberately grounded at Ayungin Shoal, also known internationally as Second Thomas Shoal, to establish a Philippine military outpost in the disputed waters.Since then, the vessel has assumed a role far removed from its original purpose. Once designed to transport military personnel and equipment, it became a fixed outpost for Filipino troops maintaining the country's presence in the West Philippine Sea.RefurbishmentAfter decades of exposure to the elements, the rusting vessel requires continued maintenance to sustain the Philippine outpost and improve conditions for the personnel stationed aboard it.The Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) has been pursuing measures to maintain the ship and improve its habitability, including better facilities for troops living aboard the vessel.AFP spokesman for the West Philippine Sea Rear Adm. Roy Vincent Trinidad said that funds had long been allocated for the ship's upkeep and improvements to living conditions. He maintained that despite its weathered appearance, the commissioned warship remained structurally sound and would continue serving its purpose at Ayungin Shoal.The refurbishment effort follows earlier initiatives to repair the vessel and provide more decent sleeping and dining facilities for personnel assigned to the remote outpost.In 2023, then-AFP chief Gen. Romeo Brawner Jr. said the military was undertaking superficial repairs to improve the troops' living conditions, including their sleeping quarters, dining facilities and internet access.Keeping the vessel serviceable and habitable helps sustain the Philippine military presence at Ayungin Shoal, where the country faces persistent challenges from China's maritime activities.China has objected to the repair and construction activities involving the ship. However, the Department of Foreign Affairs said the provisional understanding between Manila and Beijing governing rotation and resupply missions contained no provision prohibiting repairs or construction aboard the BRP Sierra Madre.The Philippines maintains that it has the right to maintain its commissioned naval vessel and sustain its personnel at the shoal.Beyond its strategic importance, the vessel's history is defined by the generations of military personnel who have lived and worked aboard it.For troops assigned to Ayungin Shoal, service means enduring isolation, difficult living conditions and the uncertainty of operating in waters where encounters with Chinese coast guard and maritime militia vessels can escalate into dangerous confrontations.The regular rotation and resupply missions that sustain the outpost have repeatedly faced challenges from Chinese vessels seeking to block or disrupt Philippine operations.These confrontations have drawn international attention to the shoal, but the daily realities of deployment extend beyond the geopolitical dispute.For servicemen stationed aboard the aging ship, their responsibilities include maintaining the outpost and carrying out their duties despite the hardships of living in a remote location far from their families.Their loved ones, meanwhile, must contend with prolonged separation and the anxiety that comes with having family members assigned to a contested maritime area.The vessel's legacy is therefore measured not only by its decades of service or its role in the Philippines' territorial position, but also by the sacrifices of the servicemen who have served aboard it and the families who have supported them.Sustaining PH presenceMore than 80 years after its launch, the BRP Sierra Madre connects the country's wartime naval history with its present-day maritime challenges.Its continued presence at Ayungin Shoal demonstrates Manila's determination to maintain its position in the West Philippine Sea. The shoal lies within the Philippines' exclusive economic zone, although China also claims the area.The 2016 arbitral ruling in the Philippines' case against China invalidated the legal basis for China's expansive claim to historic rights within the so-called nine-dash line. Beijing has rejected the ruling.The vessel remains a focal point of Philippine-China tensions, with Filipino personnel relying on regular resupply missions for food, water, fuel and other necessities.Maintaining the aging ship and improving conditions for its occupants are part of the broader effort to sustain that presence.But its story is also one of continuity: a vessel launched during World War II that has outlived its original purpose and became a symbol of national resolve, supported by generations of servicemen whose duties have taken them far from home.The ship's history recalls not only the passage of time but also the people who have given meaning to its service — the personnel who have stood watch, those who have passed on and the families who continue to wait for their loved ones to return safely home.

- Lazaro ends Myanmar trip with no Suu Kyi meeting (2026-11-02 16:08)

YANGON, Myanmar — Asean’s special Myanmar envoy, Foreign Secretary Theresa Lazaro, wrapped up a two-day visit to the nation Thursday, with no sign of meeting detained democratic ex-leader Aung San Suu Kyi.The Philippines, which holds the rotating chair of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean), has repeatedly called this year for access to Suu Kyi, detained since being unseated in a 2021 military coup.The status of the 81-year-old has long been a sticking point for the 11-nation Asean bloc, which has frozen Myanmar’s leaders out of its summits since the putsch.Lazaro and Foreign Minister Tin Maung Swe “held substantive discussions on ways to restore Myanmar’s original role and rights within Asean,” according to a statement from Myanmar’s foreign ministry.It did not mention any meeting with the Nobel Peace Prize laureate Suu Kyi, who authorities say is under house arrest in the capital Naypyidaw.The foreign ministry earlier said Lazaro had spent Wednesday in the eastern state of Shan, overseeing humanitarian schemes aiding those displaced in the civil war triggered by the coup.This year, analysts say authorities have allowed Suu Kyi increasing — albeit still extremely limited — contact with the outside world in a bid to shake off their pariah status abroad.Last week, there were two rare updates on Suu Kyi.On Monday, authorities in Myanmar said she received a package from Britain’s King Charles, including two books about soil and a “sealed diplomatic communication” from the monarch.Her UK-based son Kim Aris was then allowed a 20-minute consular phone call with her last Thursday, their first spoken communication in more than half a decade.He told Agence France-Presse (AFP) his mother sounded “fairly healthy” but he feared she was being used as a pawn to improve the public image of those detaining her.The Philippines requested “brief access” for Lazaro to meet Suu Kyi in April, after authorities said she was moved from prison to house arrest.In August, when she met Myanmar’s senior Red Cross official, they made a renewed call for access.

- PH joins Asian countries, US in fight vs online scams (2026-11-02 16:07)

THE Philippines has joined eight other Asia-Pacific countries and the United States in strengthening cross-border law enforcement cooperation against online scams, fraudulent recruitment, and other transnational crimes.Rendel Ryan Sy, acting chief of the Bureau of Immigration’s (BI) Fugitive Search Unit, represented the country in the US Department of State’s three-week International Visitor Leadership Program (IVLP) held from Oct. 3 to 24, 2026. The program, titled "Law Enforcement Solutions to Combat Online Scams and Transnational Crime," brought together regional leaders to address the growing intersection of digital fraud and organized crime.The program gathered officials from the Philippines, Brunei, Cambodia, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, South Korea, Singapore and Thailand.Through this exchange, the BI aims to improve intelligence-sharing mechanisms, enhance its ability to track fugitives, and better protect potential victims from exploitative situations often linked to international criminal network.The three-week exchange covered Washington, D.C.; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Seattle, Washington, where delegates engaged with US government agencies, courts, financial institutions, technology organizations and community groups.Discussions focused on the growing threat of online fraud, including scams targeting ordinary citizens and fraudulent overseas job offers used to lure unsuspecting workers into potentially exploitative situations.Participants also explored ways to improve intelligence-sharing and coordination among law enforcement agencies, financial institutions and telecommunications companies to detect scams, gather digital evidence and disrupt criminal networks operating across borders.US officials shared strategies on fraud prevention, victim assistance and public-private partnerships, while community organizations discussed ways to protect vulnerable groups, particularly senior citizens, from online criminals.The exchange highlighted the increasingly blurred lines between online scams, human trafficking and other forms of organized crime, underscoring the need for countries to work together in tracking suspects, protecting victims and prosecuting offenders. “Behind every scam are real victims and families,” Sy said, stressing that stronger partnerships with regional neighbors, US counterparts and communities are essential in confronting increasingly sophisticated criminal networks.BI Commissioner Joel Anthony Viado said Sy's participation would help strengthen the agency's ability to track fugitives, exchange intelligence and prevent foreign criminal groups from using Philippine territory as a base for illegal activities. “Transnational crime demands a coordinated response that goes beyond borders,” Viado said.He added that sharing intelligence and law enforcement expertise with international partners would improve the country's ability to dismantle criminal networks and protect Filipinos.

- Gatchalian wants pet crematoriums probed (2026-11-02 16:05)

SENATE President Sherwin Gatchalian has called for a nationwide inspection of pet crematoriums and other animal aftercare businesses after 29 dead pets were found dumped along a roadside in San Jose del Monte, Bulacan.Gatchalian said pet owners who paid for what they expected to be a dignified final farewell for their beloved companions were instead left with the distressing discovery that the animals had been discarded like garbage. “Grieving pet owners paid for a decent final farewell for their beloved companion animals, only for them to be dumped like garbage on a roadside,” he said in a statement. “This is a clear case of fraud, and those responsible for such an offense must be held accountable,” he added.The remains of the dogs and cats were discovered in a vacant lot in Barangay Minuyan Proper. The animals were found inside plastic bags placed in several large sacks, with labels bearing their names and weights.Linked to the incident was Ahjay Paws Aftercare Pet Crematorium in Bacoor City, Cavite, after pet owners raised complaints over the fate of their deceased animals entrusted to the establishment for cremation.Bacoor Mayor Strike Revilla ordered the crematorium closed after its owner failed to present sufficient documentation and CCTV footage proving that the cremations had actually been carried out. The owner reportedly said some animals had been brought to another facility in Caloocan City for cremation but could not provide adequate proof of the procedures.More than 30 pet owners sought answers from the establishment, with some considering legal action and seeking compensation for the alleged failure to deliver the services they had paid for.The Philippine Animal Welfare Society also urged affected pet owners to pursue legal action, saying the alleged misrepresentation of cremation services could constitute estafa under Article 315(2)(a) of the Revised Penal Code.Against this backdrop, Gatchalian urged local government units (LGUs) nationwide and concerned government agencies, particularly the Bureau of Animal Industry, to inspect and audit all operating pet service providers, including crematoriums.He said authorities must verify whether these establishments are properly licensed, comply with environmental and sanitation regulations, and observe clear standards of integrity in handling deceased animals.Gatchalian said he could relate to the grief of pet owners who consider their animals members of the family. “As a pet parent myself, it is heartbreaking and alarming to hear about our beloved pets being treated this way when we consider them members of our family,” he said.

- Go bats for stronger fire prevention (2026-11-02 16:04)

SEN. Christopher “Bong” Go has called for stronger fire prevention measures, including more firefighting equipment, additional personnel and regular public safety campaigns, warning that a blaze in one house can put an entire neighborhood at risk.During his recent visit to fire-affected families in Barangay 75-A Matina Aplaya, Davao City, Go said the government must strengthen the capabilities of the Bureau of Fire Protection (BFP) and intensify community education to prevent fires and minimize their impact on neighboring households. “People must really be taught to take precautions because whenever one house catches fire, the neighbors are affected, too,” Go said. “We cannot always predict what life will bring. We may encounter misfortune and suffer a house fire. That is why, as one of the authors of the Bureau of Fire Protection Modernization Act in the Senate, we are pushing for additional firefighting equipment, more personnel, and monthly public education campaigns,” he said.Go’s visit came three days after a fire struck the community on Oct. 25. Together with his Malasakit Team, he provided 42 families with financial assistance, water containers, grocery packs, snacks, vitamins, shirts, and basketballs and volleyballs.The senator has pushed for legislative measures aimed at strengthening fire prevention, emergency preparedness and disaster response, particularly by improving the capabilities of frontline responders and providing communities with better protection during emergencies.Among them is RA 11589, or the Bureau of Fire Protection Modernization Act, which he principally authored and co-sponsored.Go also cited RA 12076, or the Ligtas Pinoy Centers Act, signed into law on Dec. 6, 2024. As principal author and co-sponsor, he helped advance the measure requiring the establishment of permanent, safe and well-equipped evacuation centers in every city and municipality.

• Police maintain tight security measures (2026-11-02 16:03)

THE Philippine National Police (PNP) maintained heightened security at major transport terminals and key thoroughfares as millions of Filipinos return home from a long holiday weekend. “As travelers make their way back to their homes, schools, and workplaces, the PNP remains fully mobilized to keep roads secure, maintain public order, and respond swiftly to any incident that may disrupt travel. Our priority is to ensure that every Filipino reaches their destination safely,” said PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. in a statement on Monday.Nartatez directed all police regional offices to sustain visibility patrols along major highways, bus terminals, seaports, airports, and transport interchanges, particularly in areas where large volumes of passengers and vehicles are expected.He also reminded motorists to exercise caution and strictly observe road safety rules. “No destination is worth risking lives for. We urge motorists to follow traffic laws, avoid speeding, never drive under the influence of alcohol, refrain from using mobile phones while driving, and take adequate rest before long trips,” he said.Millions flocked to cemeteries across the country during the observance of All Saints’ Day and All Souls’ Day. In Manila alone, more than 1.16 million people visited the city’s two major cemeteries.The National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO) reported confiscating 4,922 prohibited items from cemetery visitors during All Saints’ Day and All Souls’ Day in Metro Manila.LtCol. Hazel Asilo, NCRPO spokesman, said Monday there were no reported disturbances in cemeteries, bus terminals and other places of convergence in the capital region.The confiscated items included cigarette lighters, cigarettes and electronic cigarettes or vapes, Asilo said.Despite annual reminders about cemetery regulations, some visitors continued to bring prohibited items, either because they were unaware of the restrictions or ignored the rules, she said.

• American with P17.46M marijuana stash nabbed (2026-11-02 16:02)

AN American passenger was arrested at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) after authorities seized P17.46 million worth of suspected marijuana kush concealed in his luggage, the Bureau of Customs (BOC) said.The seizure at NAIA Terminal 3 over the weekend brought to nearly P24.8 million the value of marijuana kush intercepted at the airport within four days.The bureau, in coordination with the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) and the NAIA Inter-Agency Drug Interdiction Task Group, recovered 17,464 grams of marijuana kush from the American, who arrived from Bangkok, Thailand.Customs personnel flagged the passenger’s two checked-in suitcases after X-ray screening showed suspicious images. A subsequent K9 inspection also indicated the possible presence of illegal drugs, prompting a thorough physical examination.Inspectors discovered the illegal substance in 15 vacuum-sealed packets concealed in food packages.Five packages weighing 5,122 grams, with an estimated street value of P5.12 million, were recovered from the first suitcase. The second contained 10 packages weighing 12,342 grams and valued at P12.34 million.The American’s arrest came three days after the interception of 7,335 grams of suspected marijuana kush worth P7.33 million from abandoned luggage at NAIA Terminal 3 on Oct. 26.The bags also originated from Bangkok, and were concealed in aluminum food pouches and sealed plastic bags.The seized contraband was turned over to the PDEA for proper disposition and the filing of appropriate charges.BOC-NAIA District Collector Yasmin Obillos-Mapa credited the seizures to intensified airport surveillance and close coordination among law enforcement agencies.Customs Commissioner Ariel Nepomuceno commended the BOC personnel, PDEA and NAIA-IADITG, and said the fight against illegal drugs requires sustained vigilance and cooperation among law enforcement agencies.

- Science-based climate action pushed for LGUs (2026-11-02 16:01)

THE Climate Change Commission (CCC) stressed the need to make local climate plans better by using scientific data and creating practical solutions that fit each community’s specific risks and goals.The agency said there is a need to strengthen the Enhanced Local Climate Change Action Plans (eLCCAPs) of local government units (LGUs) to ensure that their climate actions are scientifically sound and inclusive by conducting a workshop with officials from Iloilo, Misamis Oriental, and Oriental Mindoro. “It is through a science-driven eLCCAP that a provincial government can determine with mathematical precision which barangay requires an early warning system first, which critical watershed demands immediate ecological restoration, and which agricultural assistance programs must be restructured to withstand rising heat index levels,” said CCC Commissioner Rachel Anne Herrera during the workshop, stressing that the initiative aims to cater to the local needs of each community to fortify their climate resilience.As of October 2026, 91 percent of LGUs nationwide submitted their climate plans. However, only 68 percent relied on science, highlighting the need to improve LGUs’ technical skills so their plans are based on actual evidence and local vulnerabilities. Allen LimosThe two-day Transformative Actions for Climate and Ecological Protection and Development was held to review climate data, share best practices, and improve their eLCCAPs.During the workshop, the provinces reviewed climate hazards, impacts, and adaptive capacity, refined impact chain analyses, and created priority recommendations. Their feedback will help improve the eLCCAP Quality Assurance Tool and guide the creation of an eLCCAP Quality Assurance Guide. “The eLCCAP turns our highest national commitments — our National Adaptation Plan and our Nationally Determined Contribution — from high-level policy declarations into concrete, life-saving local actions,” Herrera added.The workshop also highlighted the need for climate action plans to be gender-responsive and socially inclusive. Herrera stressed the importance of including women in climate consultations and planning, noting that climate change disproportionately burdens women due to their household and caregiving roles.

- Intramuros home to some final resting places, memorials (2026-11-02 15:29)

MANILA, Philippines — Intramuros, the Walled City of Manila, is indeed historic: Within its walls are stories of many people who lived, or died, throughout Manila's history starting from the precolonial era.Some of its sites serve as final resting places or memorials through which the Intramuros Administration (IA) remembered the departed on All Souls' Day."Let us take a moment to honor the departed and remember the lives that continue to be part of Intramuros' rich heritage," the IA said in a post on Facebook wherein it shared photos of the sites.Among these are the White Cross in Fort Santiago and Memorare-Manila 1945 Monument.The White Cross is "a marble monument marking the mass grave of about 600 civilians found after the 1945 Battle of Manila," the IA said, adding, "It also honors those imprisoned in the fort whose remains were never recovered."Beside the White Cross stands a copy of St. Gertrude's prayer for the commemorated souls.The Memorare-Manila 1945 Monument was erected on the battle's 50th anniversary and "honors the 100,000 civilians who perished, including those whose remains were never recovered," the IA said.Also included in its post was the site of the World War II mass graves found in the 80s."In 1981, workers from the Intramuros Administration uncovered four graves at the Revellin del Parian containing the remains of 123 people, including Japanese soldiers and civilians," the IA said. The soldiers' remains have since been turned over to and interred in Japan while the civilian remains have likewise since been given a final resting place.Also included in its post was the Palacio del Gobernador which, it said, "served as the seat of executive power from the 1640s to 1863." The IA said, "It witnessed the 1719 assassination of Governor-General Fernando Bustamante, the 1823 Novales mutiny, and the 1945 massacre of 120 civilians by Japanese troops in air raid shelters within its ruins."General Luna St., which runs along the Palacio del Gobernador, leads visitors to the Memorare-Manila 1945 Monument and also to the San Agustin Church, a survivor of World War II."Miguel López de Legazpi, the founder of Manila and the Philippines' first governor-general, was buried at San Agustin Church after his death in 1572. His tomb, east of the main altar, also contains the remains of Juan de Salcedo and Guido de Lavezaris, which were desecrated during the British invasion in 1762," the IA said.The church has a crypt which, the IA said, "features a memorial to priests killed during the 1945 Battle of Manila and the tombs of patriots Juan Luna and Maria Orosa."While Luna is best known for the Spoliarium, Maria Orosa is known as the inventor of the banana ketchup.Meanwhile, a part of Jose Rizal's spine is at the National Historical Commission of the Philippines' Museo ni Rizal in Fort Santiago. The IA said the fragment is "believed to bear marks from the bullets fired during his execution on" Dec. 30, 1896. "The rest of his remains lie beneath the Motto Stella, or Rizal Monument, at" the Rizal Park, the IA said.The other church in Intramuros, the Manila Cathedral, also has a crypt which, the IA said, "serves as the burial place of former Archbishops of Manila, including" Michael O'Doherty, Gabriel Reyes, Rufino Santos, and Jaime Sin."As we observe All Souls' Day, we remember the departed through the historic sites across Intramuros that serve as their final resting places and lasting memorials," the IA said."From tombstones and church crypts to war memorials, these heritage sites preserve the stories, sacrifices, and legacies of those who have become part of the Walled City's history," it said.And today, while some of the people mentioned above might have stood on sides opposite each other when Spain ruled the Philippines or during World War 2 and while their stories are not forgotten, the Philippines now has better relations with other countries including Spain and Japan whose envoy to the Philippines, Ambassador Kitagawa Katsuro, its embassy in the Philippines said about a week ago, "emphasized the importance of remembering the devastation of war and the preciousness of peace" and "reaffirmed his commitment to further strengthen the friendship between Japan and the Philippines."From the information in the embassy's post on Facebook, he made the emphasis and the reaffirmation in a message for the memorial service for the war dead which was organized by an association and held at the Philippine-Japanese Friendship Memorial Shrine in Baguio. The embassy said that Chief Consul Yamazaki Masakazu delivered the message on his behalf.

- 14 Filipino seafarers rescued from sunken ship return home (2026-11-02 15:25)

- ICC urges prosecution to limit nearly 20,000 evidence items in Duterte case (2026-11-02 12:32)

MANILA, Philippines — International Criminal Court (ICC) judges urged prosecutors to narrow their nearly 20,000-item evidence list in the crimes against humanity case against former president Rodrigo Duterte, saying they should select documents most capable of proving the charges rather than submit every piece of material connected to the alleged killings.During the fifth status conference on Monday, defense counsel Peter Haynes said the prosecution's evidence list contained 15,529 non-witness items and another 3,712 witness-related items, bringing the total to 19,241.The list has grown nearly fourfold from approximately 5,000 items presented during the confirmation of charges stage, Haynes told the chamber.Prosecutors said that a substantial portion of the evidence came from a large dataset of government and Philippine National Police records on drug-related killings.The dataset contained information on approximately 3,422 deaths nationwide that authorities attributed to police operations during the period under investigation.The prosecution said the material was initially unstructured and required years of manual review, with analysts coding individual pages and organizing the records into a searchable database.The prosecution said it had removed about 10,000 duplicate documents from the dataset and selected materials relevant to the 57 incidents identified in its trial brief, as well as alleged killing hotspots and matters particularly relevant to the third count.It maintained that it had not submitted the entire dataset as evidence but had selected what it considered the most important documents to support its case.Presiding Judge Joanna Korner, however, questioned the need to include so many documents, particularly if several exhibits established the same facts.She said prosecutors should choose the strongest evidence rather than include every document connected to an incident.The defense, she noted, would have access to the other materials and could seek to introduce documents it considered necessary.The prosecution acknowledged that it could further reduce its evidence list and said it would review which items could be removed or streamlined.The prosecution explained that the list had been kept relatively broad partly because the team did not know which witnesses would ultimately be available to testify. It also wanted to avoid having to seek repeated permission to introduce additional documents during the trial.Duterte faces three counts of crimes against humanity involving murder and attempted murder allegedly committed during his tenure as Davao City mayor and president. He has denied the allegationsHis trial is scheduled to open on Nov. 30 before ICC Trial Chamber III in The Hague, the Netherlands.

- ICC rejects request to use Tagalog in Duterte trial (2026-11-02 11:53)

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court (ICC) has rejected a request by victims' representatives to use Tagalog in portions of their opening statement in the trial of former president Rodrigo Duterte, ruling that the presentation must be delivered in English.Paolina Massidda, counsel for the victims, asked the court to allow limited use of Tagalog to quote portions of victims' accounts during the opening statement when Duterte's trial begins on Nov. 30.Massidda said the request was intended to help Filipino victims following the proceedings connect with the experiences being presented to the judges.She told the chamber that the use of Tagalog would be limited to about 15 to 20 minutes of the overall presentation, with individual passages lasting only a minute or two.Presiding Judge Joanna Korner, however, said the Rome Statute identifies English and French as the ICC's working languages and that exceptional grounds would be needed to permit the use of another language. “The Rome Statute is quite clear. The working languages of the court are English and French," Korner said.The judge also noted that Tagalog was not spoken by all victims, some of whom speak other Philippine languages.Korner said the court would ensure that the proceedings were interpreted and that it would consider whether Tagalog translations or transcripts could be made available on the ICC website.The ruling means the victims' representatives must deliver their opening statement in English, although interpretation will be provided during the proceedings.The prosecution is expected to deliver its opening statement first, followed by the victims' representatives. The prosecution said it was working to limit its presentation to about three hours or less, while the victims' team was also reviewing the time allotted for its statement.Duterte's trial is scheduled to open on Nov. 30 before ICC Trial Chamber III in The Hague, the Netherlands.The former president faces three counts of crimes against humanity involving murder and attempted murder in connection with killings allegedly committed during his tenure as Davao City mayor and president.The charges cover alleged killings in Davao City between 2013 and June 2016, killings of so-called high-value targets nationwide from July 2016 to July 2017, and killings during barangay clearance operations from July 2016 to September 2018.

- Mayon continues to show heightened volcanic activity — Phivolcs (2026-11-02 08:50)

MANILA, Philippines — Mayon Volcano continued to show signs of heightened volcanic activity following its eruption last week, the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology (Phivolcs) said Monday.Phivolcs Director Dr. Teresito Bacolcol said that while the volcano remains under Alert Level 3, volcanic activity has persisted, including a minor strombolian activity observed at dawn lasting 41 seconds with a plume reaching 300 meters above the crater. "We also monitor what we call RSAM—or Real-Time Seismic Amplitude Measurement—which measures the average strength of recorded seismic signals over a set interval," he said in both English and Filipino in an interview with PTV. "These are the indicators we look at to determine if the situation might escalate—potentially requiring us to raise the alert level to 4. However, based on what we are seeing right now, it remains at alert level 3," he added.On October 30, 2026, Mayon Volcano had a moderate eruption which prompted the agency to raise its status to Alert Level 3.

- BuCor denies charging NBP inmates for water (2026-11-02 07:46)

MANILA, Philippines — The superintendent of the New Bilibid Prison (NBP) has denied allegations that persons deprived of liberty (PDLs) were made to pay for their water supply amid the repair of the national penitentiary's water pumps.NBP Superintendent Gary Garcia said on Monday that the Bureau of Corrections (BuCor) was purchasing additional water from Maynilad Water Services Inc. and deploying fire trucks to ensure adequate supply.Garcia stressed that water delivered by Maynilad and BuCor fire trucks to inmates is free.He issued the clarification following reports that inmates were being required to pay for their water supply. "I held a dialogue with the PDLs yesterday, and they confirmed that the water supplied by Maynilad and the water delivered by BuCor fire trucks are free of charge because the agency is shouldering the expenses,” Garcia said.From Oct. 29 to Nov. 1, Maynilad delivered 80 cubic meters of water to the prison’s Reception and Diagnostic Center (RDC).BuCor fire trucks made five deliveries during the same period.The RDC reported a daily cost of P14,538.54 and a total cost of P58,154.16 for the four days of Maynilad deliveries.Garcia said the prison’s water pumps remained under repair, echoing BuCor Director General Gregorio Pio P. Catapang Jr.’s disclosure last week.The BuCor said it would continue working to restore the prison’s water pumps while maintaining water deliveries through Maynilad and the use of fire trucks.

- MNLF denies sheltering Bato (2026-11-02 05:01)

MANILA, Philippines — The Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) has denied sheltering Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, dismissing as speculation claims that the fugitive lawmaker may have sought refuge with an armed group in Mindanao.In a statement, the MNLF said it had no relationship with dela Rosa.The group said dela Rosa's public references to the MNLF stemmed mainly from his experiences during the Marawi conflict and his support for peace-building programs benefiting former combatants and their children.It also cited the senator's advocacy for the faster integration of qualified MNLF and Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) members into the Philippine National Police (PNP) and the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP), saying this reflected policy-level engagement rather than personal or organizational ties.The MNLF acknowledged that its founder, Nur Misuari, was known to be a friend of dela Rosa's political patron, former president Rodrigo Duterte. It also noted reports that Misuari and dela Rosa personally knew each other.However, the organization stressed that these connections did not establish that dela Rosa was an MNLF member, an operational ally or someone currently under its protection.It said claims that the MNLF was protecting the senator remained speculative, adding that the organization was fragmented and it was uncertain whether Misuari's faction would be willing or able to shield him from arrest.The statement came amid speculation over dela Rosa's whereabouts and possible links to an armed group in Mindanao.

- On All Saints' Day, Philippine town honors dead with fire (2026-11-02 02:55)

SAGADA Philippines — Tiny pinewood bonfires burned through the night at a mountain cemetery as the largely Christian Philippines remembered its dead, turning the fog-shrouded hilltop into a vast, fragrant altar of light.The eerie Panag-aapoy ("to light a fire") ceremony in the tourist town of Sagada has marked All Saints' Day for the past 122 years, said Winston Garlejo Menong, director of the Episcopal Church of Saint Mary the Virgin, which owns the cemetery.As night crept in and darkness blanketed the four-hectare burial ground, the hum of activity and thick smoke gave way to a sepulchral glow as fires burned for its more than 2,000 dead.The Cordillera mountain region's animist residents adopted Christianity only after Spain ceded the Philippines to the United States in 1898, four centuries after Spanish friars had converted the people of the coasts to Catholicism.US Protestant missionaries encouraged Sagada's residents to bury their dead and light candles on their graves, he said."In our Biblical context, Christ is the light," Menong said.Be it with candles or the pine sticks preferred in Sagada, lighting a flame is " inviting the presence of Christ with us, having fellowship with our departed loved ones", he said.Respecting boundariesSagada's first Christians burned pinewood because candles were expensive and their flames were easily snuffed out by wind -- unlike the brisk burn of the aromatic, sap-rich pines that cover the Cordilleras, Sagada tourism officer Maria Teresa Abad said.The practice echoes the burning of incense in Buddhist rituals, though pine's sharp natural scent makes it stand out from the aromatic powders used in joss sticks.Cybil Domoguen returned to Sagada this year with her father and a bundle of 20-inch (51 centimetre) pine sticks to honour the grandparents who had raised her there."It's very unusual that people actually come here to watch. Usually one comes to the cemetery to pray for a dead relative," the 31-year-old teacher told AFP."If a grave does not have any visitors, people make sure to light some sticks for them."Like others participating in the ceremony, she has conflicted feelings about the growing tourist presence."Last year, there were tourists who were taking pictures of us, which was uncomfortable," she added."We have no problem with strangers as long as they respect boundaries."Hanging coffinsThe people of Sagada did not always light flames over their dead, or even bury them.Before the missionaries arrived, the preferred practice was to hang coffins from the walls of cliffs or wedge them into the mouths of caves, a custom that only fully died out in 2010, Abad, the tourism officer, said.Some of the "hanging coffins" can still be seen on nearby Sagada cliffs."Traditional burial beliefs associate caves and elevated burial places with the spirit's passage toward the ancestral realm", something burial would hinder, she said.It also had the practical benefit of keeping remains safe from wild animals and flooding.Over time, as Sagada's mild climate and abundant waterfalls turned it into a popular refuge from the tropical heat, the Panag-aapoy -- and the hanging coffins -- became massive tourist draws in themselves, to the chagrin of residents.The church and local government have since taken steps to protect the region's cultural heritage. AFP

• Police deny Bantag escaped arrest in Ifugao (2026-11-02 02:21)

MANILA, Philippines — The Police Regional Office Cordillera Administrative Region (PROCOR) on Monday denied reports that former Bureau of Corrections (BuCor) chief Gerald Bantag escaped arrest during a police operation in Lamut, Ifugao.PROCOR clarified that no arrest was made during the operation, meaning Bantag remains at large.It said the Ifugao Police Provincial Office and the 15th Special Action Company of the 1st Regional Mobile Force Battalion conducted an operation in Sitio Alupapan, Barangay Pugol to verify information about Bantag's whereabouts.However, the former corrections chief was not found at the location.Lamut Mayor Mariano Bayawagan Jr. earlier claimed that Bantag escaped during the police operation.According to the mayor, police received information that Bantag was hiding at a poultry farm in Barangay Pugol and allegedly posing as a worker there.Bantag faces murder charges over the October 2022 killings of broadcaster Percival “Percy Lapid” Mabasa and New Bilibid Prison inmate Cristito “Jun” Villamor Palaña, the alleged middleman in the journalist’s murder.The Department of Justice (DOJ) indicted Bantag and his former deputy, Ricardo Zulueta, in March 2023 for the two killings.Lapid was shot dead by motorcycle-riding gunmen near his residence in Las Piñas City on Oct. 3, 2022.Villamor, who was allegedly involved in arranging the killing, died inside the New Bilibid Prison in Muntinlupa City on Oct. 18, 2022, shortly after the suspected gunman, Joel Escorial, surrendered to authorities and admitted his role in the broadcaster’s killing.A forensic examination found that Villamor died of asphyxia due to plastic-bag suffocation, prompting a separate murder investigation.Prosecutors alleged that Bantag masterminded Lapid’s killing and that Villamor was killed to prevent him from revealing details of the plot.Bantag and Zulueta denied the allegations. Arrest warrants were issued against them in 2023.Zulueta died in March 2024.

• Lacson: Senate majority to strip 2027 budget of ‘pork' (2026-11-02 01:41)

MANILA, Philippines — The Senate majority bloc is united in stripping the proposed P7.2 trillion 2027 national budget of questionable and corruption-prone allocations, including projects inserted by lawmakers without proper vetting, Sen. Panfilo Lacson said.Lacson said on Monday the majority, including himself, backed efforts to weed out unwarranted allocations and ensure transparency at every stage of the budget-making process. “The majority of senators are rallying behind Senate Finance Committee Chairman JV Ejercito’s efforts to cleanse the 2027 budget of unwarranted, whimsical, and corruption-prone items. — ALL MEANS ALL!” Lacson said in a social media post.Over the weekend, Ejercito secured a commitment from the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) to remove infrastructure projects without complete supporting documents from the House-approved budget bill before plenary debates, unless the agency submits the required documents by Nov. 3.Budget advocacy groups earlier cited the lack of supporting documents as one of the red flags in the House version of the proposed spending measure, warning that projects without clear documentation and proper justification could become vehicles for questionable spending.A Senate review found that the number of DPWH projects had increased from 11,420 in the National Expenditure Program, the executive branch's original spending proposal, to 16,244 in the House-transmitted General Appropriations Bill.Of these, 6,271 projects were introduced by lawmakers without prior vetting by the executive branch, raising questions about how the additional infrastructure allocations were selected, evaluated and justified.Ejercito also announced that civil society organizations would be invited to observe the bicameral conference committee deliberations on the budget, where the Senate and House of Representatives reconcile their respective versions of the spending measure. The proceedings would also be livestreamed to allow the public to monitor discussions and proposed changes.The transparency measures are part of broader efforts to prevent the return of questionable budget practices, particularly the insertion of projects and allocations outside the regular planning and evaluation process.

- Gatchalian seeks crackdown on pet crematoriums (2026-11-02 01:31)

MANILA, Philippines — Senate President Sherwin Gatchalian has called for a nationwide inspection of pet crematoriums and other animal aftercare businesses after 29 dead animals were found in San Jose del Monte, Bulacan.Gatchalian said pet owners who paid for what they expected to be a dignified final farewell for their beloved companions were instead left with the distressing discovery that the animals had been discarded like garbage.He denounced the incident as a “clear case of fraud.” “Those responsible for such an offense must be held accountable,” he said.The pet dumping was linked to Ahjay Paws Aftercare Pet Crematorium in Bacoor City, Cavite.Bacoor City Mayor Strike Revilla ordered the crematorium closed after its owner failed to present sufficient documentation and CCTV footage proving that the cremations had actually been carried out. The owner reportedly said some animals had been brought to another facility in Caloocan City for cremation but could not provide adequate proof of the procedures.Gatchalian urged local government units (LGUs) nationwide and concerned government agencies, particularly the Bureau of Animal Industry, to conduct inspections and audits of all operating pet service providers, including crematoriums.He said authorities must verify whether these establishments are properly licensed, comply with environmental and sanitation regulations, and observe clear standards of integrity in handling deceased animals.He stressed that businesses offering pet cremation and aftercare services must be “licensed, environmentally compliant, and held to clear standards of integrity” to ensure that no other family experiences similar treatment.Gatchalian also expressed dismay over the incident, saying he could relate to the grief of pet owners who consider their animals members of the family. “As a pet parent myself, it is heartbreaking and alarming to hear about our beloved pets being treated this way when we consider them members of our family,” he said.

- Govt urged to extend soft loans to MSMEs, farmers (2026-11-01 22:16)

SENATE President Sherwin Gatchalian called on the government to make available urgent financing assistance, including soft loans, to micro, small and medium enterprises (MSMEs) and the agriculture sector as the economy faces mounting risks of slower growth.In a statement, Gatchalian said the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas’ (BSP) recent 50-basis-point interest rate hike could make borrowing more expensive and further restrict access to credit at a time when businesses need support to stay afloat. “Economic growth is already slowing, and now interest rates have gone up. We do not want more Filipinos to lose their jobs and the unemployment rate to rise further,” he said.The Monetary Board raised the BSP’s target reverse repurchase rate to 5.5 percent on Oct. 22, its fourth consecutive rate increase this year and its first 50-basis-point hike since February 2023.The overnight deposit and lending facility rates were also raised to 5 percent and 6 percent, respectively.The central bank said it decided on a larger rate adjustment to address broadening price pressures and rising inflation risks. It warned that inflation could accelerate further in the coming months and remain elevated through 2027, with higher global oil prices, transportation fare increases and the potential effects of El Niño on agricultural production and food prices contributing to the outlook.The BSP also raised its 2027 inflation forecast to 6 percent from its previous projection of 5.4 percent, while keeping its 2026 forecast at 6.1 percent.It said the rate adjustment was intended to contain the wider effects of price increases and keep inflation expectations anchored.Gatchalian said the government should be ready to offer concessional loans to MSMEs and agricultural producers to help them manage higher financing costs, sustain operations and avoid layoffs.MSMEs account for the vast majority of businesses in the Philippines and provide a significant share of employment, making access to affordable credit important to business continuity and livelihood protection.Farmers, meanwhile, need financing for seeds, fertilizer, fuel and other production expenses, particularly as climate-related risks and volatile oil prices threaten agricultural output and incomes.While the BSP’s rate increases are aimed at curbing inflation, higher policy rates can also translate into more expensive borrowing for businesses and consumers, depending on how banks adjust their lending rates.Gatchalian also cited other downside risks, including elevated inflation driven by rising petroleum prices amid continuing tensions in the Middle East, the threat of an extreme El Niño, and weak investor confidence amid corruption issues in government. “These challenges are piling up at a time when our economy is already facing difficulties. We must ensure that businesses, particularly MSMEs and those in the agriculture sector, have access to the financing they need,” he said.Higher fuel prices could increase transportation, production and logistics costs, while prolonged dry conditions could affect farm output and drive up agricultural production expenses. Together with tighter credit conditions, these pressures could weigh on business activity, household purchasing power and employment.Gatchalian said timely government assistance would be crucial in helping businesses weather the economic headwinds and preventing further job losses. “We cannot afford to abandon the private sector, especially at a time when economic growth is slowing. The government must take the lead in providing support,” he added. CATHERINE VALENTE

- BOC holds first Export Summit for Filipino businesses (2026-11-01 22:14)

THE Bureau of Customs (BOC) said that Filipino products boast world-class quality but still struggle to break into foreign markets.Customs Commissioner Ariel Nepomuceno said the BOC is stepping up efforts to help Filipino businesses penetrate international markets by bringing exporters face-to-face with government agencies at its first-ever Export Summit over the week to address trade barriers and simplify export procedures.Nepomuceno said the BOC wants to make exporting easier and more predictable so Filipino entrepreneurs can concentrate on growing their businesses and reaching more customers abroad. “The quality of Filipino products is already there. What we need are more opportunities for them to reach more markets,” he said. “Our job at the Bureau of Customs is to make the process simpler and more efficient so our exporters can focus on growing their businesses,” he added.Organized under the guidance of Deputy Commissioner Agaton Teodoro Uvero of the Assessment and Operations Coordinating Group in coordination with the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) and the Department of Agriculture (DA), the summit focused on customs procedures, free trade agreements, regulatory requirements and government support programs.The initiative comes as the government seeks to expand the country’s export footprint, with many Filipino businesses still struggling to navigate complex customs rules, comply with changing regulations, and maximize opportunities under existing trade agreements.Port Operations Service Director Melon Carlo Santiago said government agencies must remain responsive to exporters’ concerns and ensure policies and services keep pace with industry demands.Participants received updates on customs processes, Free Trade Agreements (FTAs), export assistance programs, and developments involving the Asean Single Window. They also had the opportunity to raise operational concerns directly with government representatives.For Kayrel P. Buenafe, chief of the BOC Export Coordination Division, the summit was an opportunity to strengthen trust between government and the private sector. “Every shipment leaving our ports carries more than goods. It carries the hard work of our producers, the aspirations of our workers, and the promise of a stronger Philippine economy,” Buenafe said.Beyond facilitating shipments, the BOC also helps local producers compete internationally, opening opportunities for business expansion, increased export earnings, and wider access to foreign markets.The export summit is part of BOC’s trade facilitation reforms aligned with President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.‘s directive to improve the country’s competitiveness and expand opportunities for Philippine-made products in the global marketplace.

- ‘No sacred cows in budget review’ (2026-11-01 16:20)

NO LAWMAKER will be spared scrutiny in the Senate's review of the proposed 2027 national budget, as senators correct questionable allocations and budget insertions, Sen. Panfilo Lacson said.Lacson said he and fellow members in the Senate majority bloc fully support Senate Finance Committee Chairman Sen. JV Ejercito in raising red flags in the House-approved version of the proposed General Appropriations Act (GAA). “Our attitude now is to go gung-ho. If anyone gets hit, so be it,” he said in an interview with One News.Asked whether the scrutiny would cover the biggest net increase in public works allocations for the congressional district of presidential son and Ilocos Norte Rep. Sandro Marcos in the House-approved budget, Lacson replied: “Yes, absolutely.” “If we make exceptions, many will ask for exceptions, and we won't succeed because there will be plea bargaining,” he said.The Senate is scheduled to resume plenary sessions on Nov. 9, when debates on the proposed 2027 budget will begin.Lacson said he had submitted his subcommittee reports on the proposed budgets of government agencies assigned to him, which are now being reviewed by the Legislative Budget Research and Monitoring Office (LBRMO). “Once the plenary sessions resume, the LBRMO would have finished its review, and we can introduce amendments to restore the changes the House made to its version of the General Appropriations Bill,” he said.Lacson expressed confidence that questionable insertions would not find their way into the Senate version of the budget, citing the sentiments of his colleagues in the majority bloc. “In the Senate, I don't know if someone sneaked in funds for pet projects, but I don't think so. When we in the majority bloc chat, I can feel my colleagues' sentiments,” he said.The Senate may invite civil society organizations (CSOs), particularly budget advocacy groups, to observe the bicameral conference committee proceedings and expose lawmakers who attempt to insert questionable allocations, he said.He said he had challenged budget watchdogs to be prepared to sit through lengthy deliberations so they could witness the proceedings firsthand. “We must not just be vigilant. We may have to resort to shaming because there are those who are shameless in making insertions, and we are still reeling from the flood control scandal,” Lacson said.The country, he added, needs a fundamental overhaul of its budget process to curb political patronage and ensure that government allocations reflect the actual needs and priorities of local government units (LGUs).He lamented that political affiliations appeared to influence budget allocations, with administration allies receiving larger funding while lawmakers in the minority were given little or nothing.He cited instances when contractors for infrastructure projects appeared to have been predetermined even before the contracts were awarded. “In Taguig, for example, before the contract is awarded, the contractor is already known. This is a matter of record. The evidence is with the Ombudsman,” he said.Lacson likewise raised concerns over the continued issuance of guarantee letters (GLs), despite provisions in the 2026 GAA banning it. “We need a re-engineering of the budget. We cannot have more of the same. Up to now there are guarantee letters even if the 2026 GAA banned them. These may be residues of past budgets. But I know congressmen who still offer GLs,” he said.He said reforms should begin with the Development Budget Coordination Committee (DBCC), which prepares the government's proposed spending program, to prevent questionable insertions from entering the National Expenditure Program (NEP) even before it reaches Congress.The proposed 2027 budget amounts to P7.2 trillion, about P407 billion or 6 percent higher than the 2026 budget.The House of Representatives approved its version of the General Appropriations Bill on third and final reading on Oct. 12, incorporating about P116 billion in amendments.The Senate is conducting its own review before the two chambers reconcile their respective versions in the bicameral conference committee.The bicameral stage is critical because lawmakers from both chambers settle differences in their respective budget proposals before submitting the final version for ratification and presidential approval.Ejercito said opening the bicameral proceedings to public observation would build on the transparency measures adopted by the Senate Finance Committee throughout its budget review. “All Senate Finance Committee budget hearings were livestreamed, which allowed the public to follow agency deliberations in real time,” he said.The committee held a dedicated hearing for CSOs on Oct. 26.Ejercito welcomed the groups’ calls to remove budget insertions without technical justification and restore funding cuts to foreign-assisted infrastructure projects, disaster preparedness and preventive health programs.The push for closer scrutiny comes amid concerns raised by budget watchdogs over the details and locations of some proposed projects.The House Appropriations Committee has said the bicameral conference could still address reported discrepancies in farm-to-market road project coordinates, including locations allegedly pointing to bodies of water.Ejercito said public participation should extend beyond congressional hearings to citizens' access to budget information and tools for scrutinizing government spending.The committee has incorporated digital tools developed by civil society groups, including independent research organization BetterGov.ph, into the Senate's budget transparency portal (https://budget-transparency-portal.senate.gov.ph).Through the portal, citizens can review agency budget documents, submit position papers and flag allocations they consider questionable. "Transparency is not just a policy statement; it is an active mechanism. These tools were built by watchdogs themselves, and we are glad to give them a home on the Senate website so ordinary citizens can scrutinize where public funds are going," Ejercito said.

- What to expect at Duterte's ICC trial (2026-11-01 16:09)

FORMER president Rodrigo Duterte's trial at the International Criminal Court (ICC) will open on Nov. 30, with judges set to read the charges, ask him to enter a plea, and hear opening statements before the prosecution begins presenting its evidence.The proceedings, scheduled to start at 10 a.m. in The Hague (5 p.m. Manila time) will examine allegations that Duterte committed crimes against humanity of murder and attempted murder in the Philippines between Nov. 1, 2011, and March 16, 2019.The charges have been confirmed for trial. Prosecutors must prove the charges beyond reasonable doubt, and the defense will have the chance to challenge the evidence and present its own case.Here is how the trial is expected to proceed.Opening dayThe three-judge Trial Chamber III will first verify that Duterte understands the nature of the charges against him. The judges will then ask whether he admits guilt or pleads not guilty.The court will read the charges previously confirmed by the ICC's Pre-Trial Chamber.The prosecution will deliver its opening statement first, followed by the Common Legal Representatives of Victims (CLRVs).The defense may also deliver an opening statement at the start of the trial or immediately before presenting its evidence.The prosecution has six hours to present its opening statement, while the victims' representatives have three hours. The judges have yet to determine how much time to give to the defense.Duterte faces three counts of crimes against humanity involving alleged killings during his time as Davao City mayor and president.The first count concerns alleged murders in Davao City during his mayoral period, from 2013 to June 2016.The second concerns the killings of people described as "high-value targets" during his presidency, from around July 2016 to July 2017.The third involves alleged murders and attempted murders during barangay clearing operations across the country from July 2016 to September 2018.Prosecutors allege that the crimes were committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack against a civilian population.The charges relate to crimes committed between November 2011 and March 2019. Duterte has not been convicted of these charges.The prosecution's caseAfter the opening statements, the prosecution will call its first witness. It will also present testimony and documentary, digital or physical evidence against Duterte.The judges have asked the prosecution for a detailed trial brief, which is intended to identify the principal facts the prosecution seeks to establish, the witnesses who will testify, relevant exhibits and the legal arguments.The prosecution must establish the accused's guilt to the standard required by the ICC.The party calling a witness will generally question that witness first. The victims' legal representatives may ask questions, followed by the prosecution.The defense can challenge prosecution witnesses by questioning their credibility and the reliability of their testimony.Not all testimony or evidence will necessarily be presented in the same way. Under the court's rules, certain previously recorded testimony may be submitted through procedures that do not require the witness to physically testify.The victims' representatives Victims will participate through the Common Legal Representatives of Victims, who can present their views and concerns and make submissions on matters affecting their personal interests.Their role is distinct from that of the prosecution, which carries the burden of proving the charges.The chamber's directions allow for a possible presentation of evidence by the representatives.The ICC intends, insofar as possible, to hear witness testimony in public.However, some portions of the proceedings may take place in private or closed session when necessary, including to protect sensitive information or witnesses.The court's directions require the parties to respect protective measures ordered for witnesses and to limit private or closed sessions to what is strictly necessary.After the prosecution completes its presentation, the victims' legal representatives may submit observations and, if authorized by the judges, present evidence.The defense will then present its case and call witnesses. It may challenge the prosecution's evidence and offer its own evidence in response to the charges.The chamber has directed the defense to identify the principal factual or legal issues it disputes with the prosecution and outline the general nature of its defense.The court has also clarified that this does not prevent the defense from raising additional issues later if they emerge during the trial or its investigations.Trial Chamber III, composed of Presiding Judge Joanna Korner and Judges Keebong Paek and Nicolas Guillou, will examine the arguments and evidence presented during the trial before delivering a judgment. They may convict Duterte only if they are satisfied that the charges have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.If the prosecution fails to meet that standard, the court cannot convict him.

- Secrecy key in hunting fugitives – LacsonSecrecy key in hunting fugitives – Lacson (2026-11-01 16:08)

SEN. Panfilo Lacson on Sunday stressed the importance of keeping sensitive information confidential when pursuing high-profile fugitives.Lacson made the remark as authorities intensified the hunt for Sen. Ronald "Bato" dela Rosa, whose one-week deadline to surrender had lapsed. "SSSHHH... When pursuing a high-profile target or handling a sensitive live case, secrecy discipline is key — unless disinformation is necessary to flush the quarry into the open," Lacson said on a social media post.He said disclosing sensitive information ahead of an operation should be done only as a tactic to draw a wanted person out of hiding.Interior Secretary Jonvic Remulla announced a P50-million reward for information leading to dela Rosa's arrest.Dela Rosa is the subject of an arrest warrant issued by the International Criminal Court in connection with the administration of former president Rodrigo Duterte's campaign against drugs. He has not attended Senate sessions since late last year.He briefly resurfaced on May 11 to vote for Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano as Senate president but was sneaked out of the Senate premises during a shooting incident two days later.Sen. JV Ejercito urged authorities to ensure a peaceful resolution to the manhunt for dela Rosa, stressing that the senator must be treated fairly and accorded due process.Ejercito's appeal followed a plea from dela Rosa's wife, Nancy, who called on her husband's influential former allies to help him rather than persecute him.In a DWIZ radio interview, Ejercito said he hopes "the situation involving Senator dela Rosa can be resolved peacefully. After all, he is a former chief of the Philippine National Police." Dela Rosa's wife, Nancy, made her appeal in a Facebook post addressed to what she described as the "powerful few" who were once her husband's friends. "Please do not use him for your personal agenda. He has helped you in countless ways, and he has done you no wrong personally. He needs your help, not your persecution," she said.

- China denies ex-ambassador's claim in column (2026-11-01 16:07)

THE Chinese Embassy in Manila described as "utterly wrong" the claim that China avoids conflict in the South China Sea because of the 1951 Mutual Defense Treaty between the United States and the Philippines.The embassy objected to what retired ambassador Jaime Yambao wrote in his The Manila Times column titled “Concerning the loose tongue of an ambassador.” It said the column was “filled with serious historical falsehoods, blatant bias, and unprofessional judgment.” Yambao wrote that “if China has not attacked the Philippines, it is not for love of peace, it is the deterrent effect of the Mutual Defense Treaty between the two countries.” “China’s consistent commitment to peace, dialogue, and regional stability stems from its independent foreign policy and sincere respect for regional peace, not external military deterrence,” the embassy said in a statement. “China chooses restraint out of goodwill for its neighbors, not fear of any alliance,” it added.Yambao said that if the Chinese truly love peace, they would abide by the United Nations (UN) Charter of solving disputes by peaceful means. “They would have followed the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea on disputes settlement.” “They would have considered as settled the dispute it has with the Philippines by the conclusions of the arbitral tribunal of the Permanent Court of Arbitration (PCA) in The Hague,” he said.The PCA in July 2016 invalidated China’s claim in the South China Sea, which encroached on the Philippines’ exclusive economic zone (EEZ).The embassy stressed that the arbitral award “is legally invalid, politically biased, and lacks any binding force.” “China has never recognized this unlawful ruling, and no country can legitimately rely on it to make policy judgments or provoke maritime tensions,” it said.Yambao also mentioned calls from lawmakers and some sectors to declare Ambassador Jing Quan persona non grata for saying that “if we want to use force, we may easily win” — which was viewed as a “veiled threat against the Philippines. “It is quite likely that China would take the side of its ambassador and retaliate by declaring our innocent ambassador (Jaime FlorCruz) in Beijing persona non grata,” Yambao said.The embassy replied that “openly attacking another country’s political system in a public commentary demonstrates a severe lack of basic diplomatic courtesy and sovereign respect.” “Regrettably, the author Jaime Yambao, though a retired Philippine ambassador, shows none of the professionalism expected of a seasoned diplomat,” it said. “If a senior retired Philippine diplomat cannot objectively and accurately understand China’s consistent stance of promoting stable and peaceful China-Philippines relations, it reflects either poor cognitive judgment or regrettable diplomatic incompetence,” it said. “Such biased, confrontational, and factually erroneous remarks are truly unfortunate,” the embassy said.It also described as “entirely misleading and factually wrong” Yambao’s account of the Yultong Battle during the Korean War. “No official US or Chinese military archives support the exaggerated claim that 900 Filipino troops defeated 40,000 Chinese soldiers. In reality, Filipino forces retreated on US orders after the engagement, and Chinese troops secured full control of the battlefield,” it said.

- House prosecution: Defense could shorten impeach trial (2026-11-01 16:06)

THE impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte could be over before the end of November if the defense team limits its presentation of evidence to 10 trial days, House lead prosecutor and Batangas 2nd District Rep. Gerville Luistro said Sunday.Luistro said the prosecution expects a shorter defense presentation following the withdrawal of three of the four impeachment articles.The defense originally requested 30 trial days to present evidence on all four articles.Luistro said the prosecution expects the defense to seek only 10 full trial days for the remaining charge.The Senate impeachment court has scheduled hearings on Nov. 9 to 13, 19, 20 and 23, with some sessions extending into the evening.Completing the defense presentation within November, however, would depend on additional hearing dates or adjustments to the calendar.Luistro warned that the proceedings could extend into December if the defense requires more than 10 trial days to present its witnesses and documentary evidence. “Nevertheless, we are all hoping and praying that this impeachment trial will be over before Christmas so we can have closure and move on,” she said in Filipino.The withdrawal of the articles involving confidential funds, bribery and grave threats was approved on Oct. 13, leaving Article II, which accuses Duterte of amassed unexplained wealth, financial declarations, and maintaining income and business interests while serving as vice president.The impeachment proceedings stem from allegations against Duterte that have been the subject of congressional investigations since 2024.The senator-judges will decide the case after the presentation of evidence by both sides.Meanwhile, Luistro reiterated that officials of the Department of Education (DepEd) and the Office of the Vice President (OVP) implicated in the alleged misuse of confidential funds and bribery could still face criminal or civil proceedings despite the withdrawal of three articles.Separate investigations by the Office of the Ombudsman cover allegations involving personnel of both agencies, while the prosecution remains prepared to provide evidence gathered during congressional hearings and the impeachment proceedings. “As a matter of fact, as early as 2024, the issue of confidential funds and bribery — involving officials from the Department of Education and the Office of the Vice President — has already been under investigation by the Ombudsman,” Luistro said.The House Committee on Good Government and Public Accountability had investigated P612.5 million in confidential funds allocated to the Office of the Vice President and the Department of Education during Duterte’s tenure, including questions involving liquidation records, acknowledgment receipts and the disbursement of public funds.The committee transmitted its findings to the Ombudsman in 2024, while investigators have continued examining whether the financial transactions and supporting documents warrant further proceedings against Duterte or other responsible officials.Ombudsman Jesus Crispin “Boying” Remulla has said his office was gathering and evaluating evidence, including documents presented during the Senate impeachment trial, to determine whether there were sufficient grounds to file cases over the alleged misuse of confidential funds.The grave threats allegations are also subject to separate proceedings before the Quezon City Regional Trial Court, following the filing of criminal charges over Duterte’s November 2024 statements concerning President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., first lady Liza Marcos, and former speaker Martin Romuladez.

- Don’t let El Niño worsen learning loss (2026-11-01 16:05)

SENATE President Sherwin Gatchalian urged the Department of Education (DepEd) to adopt localized class suspension measures during El Niño, warning that blanket cancellations could put students’ learning further at risk.In a statement on Sunday, Gatchalian said the agency’s protocols must protect students from extreme heat without worsening learning loss and deepening the country's education crisis.He stressed that class suspensions should be based on actual weather and heat conditions in specific communities, rather than imposed across entire cities, provinces or regions.Gatchalian urged DepEd to ensure that its response to extreme heat does not unnecessarily interrupt instruction, particularly for elementary pupils who depend heavily on classroom teaching to develop foundational reading and literacy skills.A policy note by the Second Congressional Commission on Education (Edcom 2), released in September, highlighted the learning costs of widespread class suspensions.The study found that a typical public elementary school lost approximately 20 teaching days during the previous school year because of class suspensions prompted by various hazards, equivalent to about one in every 10 days in the official school calendar.It also found that every suspended school day was associated with the loss of approximately 1.4 days of reading progress among early-grade learners, underscoring the long-term consequences of disruptions to classroom instruction.The findings were based on preliminary estimates from an ongoing study covering more than 37,000 public elementary schools.Edcom 2 emphasized that while suspensions are necessary when students face actual danger, blanket orders could unnecessarily deprive schools in unaffected areas of learning time.The commission has called for more granular, evidence-based decisions that allow school heads and local authorities to suspend or resume classes depending on actual conditions in their communities.The Philippines is bracing for a potential super El Niño, which the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration expects to persist through the first half of 2027, peaking before the end of 2026.Aside from extreme heat, it could bring prolonged dry spells and water shortages, potentially affecting school operations, students' health and the delivery of education services.To address these risks, DepEd has introduced its four-level Hayo, Hinay, Hinga and Hinto (4H) framework, which allows schools to adjust learning arrangements according to local heat conditions and water availability.Under the guidelines, schools may continue face-to-face classes with appropriate precautions during manageable conditions, including scheduled water breaks and adjustments to outdoor activities.As heat stress increases, school heads may shorten class hours or shift to hybrid and home-based learning.When conditions become more severe, academic requirements may be reduced, with learning materials and other alternative delivery methods used to maintain continuity.All physical and home-based learning activities will be suspended when temperatures reach the danger threshold of 42 degrees Celsius or higher.

- Tulfo pushes oil hub deal with UAE (2026-11-01 16:04)

THE Philippines is pursuing a partnership with the United Arab Emirates (UAE) to build a strategic oil storage hub that could help protect consumers from global price shocks and fuel supply disruptions.Sen. Erwin Tulfo, chairman of the Senate Committee on Energy, led a Philippine delegation in talks with UAE officials on Oct. 29 on the proposed project, following an earlier meeting involving Senate President Sherwin Gatchalian, Tulfo and Abu Dhabi National Oil Co. (Adnoc) representatives.The initial meeting, held at the Senate, was attended by UAE Ambassador Mohamed Obaid Alqataam Alzaabi and Adnoc officials.Gatchalian described the discussions as meaningful.During the Oct. 29 discussions, Tulfo said he has been pushing for the oil hub “because we see how beneficial it would be for Filipinos who are experiencing price shocks from high oil prices because we lack access to it.” The Philippine delegation included Ambassador to the UAE Alfonso Ver and Special Envoy to the UAE for Trade and Investment Kathryna Yu-Pimentel.The UAE delegation, led by Adnoc Chairman Sultan Ahmed Al Jaber, expressed willingness to pursue the partnership.Adnoc supplies Petron Corp. with about 40,000 barrels of oil a day, and UAE officials said the proposed hub could help increase supply volumes.The UAE team also proposed sharing an existing storage contract framework for Philippine review as discussions move forward.The proposed partnership gained further backing from Gatchalian, who, on Oct. 26, urged the state-owned Philippine National Oil Company (PNOC) to move quickly on the opportunity.Gatchalian said Adnoc was prepared to shoulder the cost of storage tanks and oil inventory, provided PNOC made suitable land available for the facility.He also said Adnoc wanted an arrangement granting the Philippines the right of first refusal to purchase the stored oil when needed. “PNOC should not dilly-dally because Adnoc is ready,” Gatchalian said.The parties identified the second quarter of 2027 as a target for the project’s rollout, subject to further agreements on the site, infrastructure responsibilities, commercial terms and implementation schedule.The hub would anchor a broader energy partnership covering crude oil supply, refinery investments, fuel retail networks, renewable energy and gas-to-power development.Tulfo said such a partnership had yet to be finalized but vowed to lead follow-up discussions to move the project forward.

- CFO joins in celebrating the lives of saints (2026-11-01 16:03)

THE Commission on Filipinos Overseas (CFO) joined the faithful in celebrating the lives of saints, including St. Lorenzo Ruiz, the first Filipino saint and patron saint of overseas Filipino workers and migrants.The Asian Catholic Initiative said Ruiz, of Chinese-Filipino parentage, became the Philippines’ protomartyr after his execution by the Tokugawa Shogunate during its persecution of Japanese Christians in the 17th century.St. Pedro Calungsod, a young catechist from Visayas, is the second Filipino saint. He joined Spanish Jesuit missionaries in Guam to catechize the native Chamorros. He was killed when someone spread a rumor that the baptismal water used by missionaries was poisonous. “On this All Saints’ Day, the Commission on Filipinos Overseas joins the faithful in celebrating the lives of saints whose faith, courage, and devotion continue to inspire people across generations,” the CFO said on Sunday. “Their examples remind us of the enduring values of compassion, perseverance, and service that guide us in our daily lives,” it added.Senate leaders urged Filipinos to draw inspiration from the saints, strengthen their faith, and cherish the memories of departed loved ones as the country observes All Saints’ Day and All Souls’ Day.Senate President Sherwin Gatchalian called on Filipinos to remain steadfast in doing what is right. “May the saints serve as our inspiration to have strong faith and the conviction to do what is right,” Gatchalian said in his message on Sunday.Marking All Saints’ Day and All Souls’ Day on Nov. 2 is a longstanding Filipino tradition when families gather in cemeteries to offer prayers, flowers and candles in remembrance of their departed loved ones.Sen. Francis Escudero said it was an opportunity to honor the memories of loved ones whose influence and lessons continue to shape the lives of those they left behind. “Through our prayers and the light of every candle we light, the memories of our loved ones who helped shape who we are remain alive,” Escudero said.He added that the observance reminds Filipinos that relationships do not end with death but continue to live in the hearts and memories of those left behind.Sen. JV Ejercito also urged Filipinos to look to the saints for guidance in choosing the right path in life and to offer sincere prayers for their departed loved ones.Sen. Panfilo Lacson said the teachings and examples of the saints should inspire Filipinos to live with love and concern for others.Sen. - DPWH activates 24/7 hotlines (2026-11-01 16:02)

THE Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) has institutionalized a nationwide 24/7 motorist assistance hotline that connects motorists directly with regional and district engineering offices. This extends beyond the observance of All Saints’ Day to enhance public safety and improve infrastructure responsiveness for all travelers.Public Works Secretary Giovanni Lopez said motorists heading to the provinces or visiting cemeteries during and after the All Souls’ Day break can now seek immediate assistance from the DPWH for road-related emergencies.He said the initiative is part of the agency’s Lakbay-Alalay 2026 program.Lakbay Alalay is the agency’s annual motorist assistance initiative that deploys personnel and equipment to help travelers experiencing vehicle trouble or other roadside emergencies.According to the DPWH chief, President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. ordered the activation of hotlines so travelers can access DPWH assistance when they encounter incidents, including damaged roads and other hazards during their trip.Lopez ordered all DPWH Regional and District Engineering Offices “to keep their contact numbers open 24 hours a day, seven days a week” to ensure a prompt response to motorists’ concerns.He added that DPWH teams maintain around-the-clock shifts to provide emergency assistance and keep major thoroughfares free from obstructions.The initiative strengthens government efforts to make roads safer and travel more convenient during one of the country’s busiest travel periods, when highways leading to provinces, transport hubs, and cemeteries typically experience unusual traffic flow.The DPWH is coordinating with other government entities, such as the Land Transportation Office, the Philippine National Police, and local government units.

- Cayetano renews push for PDL rehab, reintegration (2026-11-01 16:01)

SENATE Minority Leader Alan Peter Cayetano reaffirmed his commitment to rehabilitate and reintegrate persons deprived of liberty (PDLs), urging inmates to embrace change and work toward a better life.Cayetano made the pledge during a visit to the Taguig City Jail, where he distributed food and hygiene supplies to thousands of inmates as part of his annual birthday outreach. “We want to do more because we know that God is not yet finished with your lives,” Cayetano told the inmates during his Oct. 31 visit.The senator urged the inmates not to let setbacks discourage them from pursuing personal transformation, stressing that changing their lives requires determination and a willingness to persevere. “He who began a good work in you will be faithful to complete it until the day of Christ Jesus,” Cayetano said, quoting Philippians 1:6. “Even if we make mistakes, the Bible says that He will complete the work He has begun. But we must first have the desire to change,” he added.Cayetano’s appeal for individual change comes amid efforts by the Bureau of Jail Management and Penology (BJMP) to strengthen rehabilitation programs that prepare inmates for their eventual return to their families and communities.These programs include education through the Alternative Learning System, livelihood projects, vocational and skills training, health services, religious and spiritual activities, and behavioral management. The bureau also provides referrals for aftercare services, including employment assistance, educational opportunities, and medical and psychological interventions for PDLs preparing for release.The BJMP’s rehabilitation efforts are anchored on the principle that jail management goes beyond safekeeping of inmates and includes providing opportunities for personal development and successful reintegration into society.

- FBI: Saipan child sex abuse suspect fled to PH (2026-11-01 04:23)

SAIPAN, Northern Mariana Islands — A Filipino accused of sexually abusing a 13-year-old girl in Saipan fled to the Philippines in May 2024, prompting federal authorities to seek his arrest.The case against Rommel Bacani was disclosed in an FBI affidavit filed in the US District Court for the Northern Mariana Islands in May 2025 but only unsealed recently.Based on the affidavit, Bacani departed Saipan for the Philippines on May 10, 2024 following a police investigation into allegations that he sexually abused a minor with her mother's knowledge.FBI special agent Richard J. Bauer said Bacani was charged in the CNMI Superior Court on May 12, 2025 with first-and second-degree sexual abuse of a minor and disturbing the peace.The affidavit said that sexual abuse of a minor carries a possible prison sentence of up to 30 years.The case stems from a March 7, 2024 investigation by the Department of Public Safety after officials at Francisco M. Sablan Middle School raised concerns about a 13-year-old student who had been frequently absent from classes.The girl's relatives told police that she had an adult boyfriend and had moved with her mother and two younger siblings into his apartment.The boyfriend was later identified as Bacani.The girl's special education teacher told investigators that the student disclosed her mother had forced her into the relationship.During a forensic interview on March 12, 2024, the girl claimed that Bacani sexually assaulted her on several occasions.The affidavit also detailed allegations that Bacani sexually abused the girl's younger sister, who was 8 years old at the time.Investigators said the children's mother knew about the relationship and allowed her daughter to sleep in the same bed as Bacani.In a Jan. 8, 2025, interview with the FBI, the mother reportedly admitted witnessing Bacani having sex with her daughter on four or five occasions.She also told investigators that Bacani became nervous after being questioned by DPS detectives in March 2024 because he feared getting into trouble over his relationship with the minor.The mother subsequently moved out of Bacani's apartment and lost contact with him.Federal authorities determined through database checks that Bacani left Saipan for the Philippines on May 10, 2024.Bauer said there was probable cause to believe Bacani traveled outside the CNMI with the intent to avoid prosecution, in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1073.The federal offense carries a possible prison sentence of up to five years, a fine, or both.The affidavit was sworn before US District Court Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona on May 22, 2025.

- No room for shady insertions: Ejercito says watchdogs allowed to join budget bicam proceedings (2026-11-01 02:52)

MANILA, Philippines — Senate Finance Committee Chairman JV Ejercito said that civil society organizations (CSOs) will participate in the bicameral deliberations on the proposed 2027 national budget, saying more public scrutiny is needed to catch unvetted projects and prevent last-minute insertions.Ejercito said the move responds to calls from business coalitions, civic groups and budget watchdogs for greater transparency and accountability in the budget process. He also confirmed that the bicameral proceedings would be livestreamed. “We are continuing to build on our best practices. This year, we will be inviting CSOs to sit in and observe the bicameral proceedings. Having more eyes on the budget will help us spot any unvetted projects or last-minute insertions that may be introduced during the bicam,” he said in a statement.Ejercito said the planned public access to the deliberations would extend the transparency measures adopted by the Senate Finance Committee throughout its review. “All Senate Finance Committee budget hearings were livestreamed, which allowed the public to follow agency deliberations in real time,” he said.The committee also held a dedicated hearing for CSOs on Oct. 26, giving participating groups an opportunity to present recommendations and raise concerns about proposed allocations.Ejercito welcomed the groups’ call to remove budget insertions without technical justification and restore funding cuts to foreign-assisted infrastructure projects, disaster preparedness and preventive health programs.He said public participation should extend beyond congressional hearings to citizens' access to budget information and tools for scrutinizing government spending.The committee has incorporated digital tools developed by civil society groups, including independent research organization BetterGov.ph, into the Senate’s budget transparency portal (https://budget-transparency-portal.senate.gov.ph).Through the portal, citizens can examine agency budget documents, submit position papers and flag allocations they consider questionable. “Transparency is not just a policy statement; it is an active mechanism. These tools were built by watchdogs themselves, and we are glad to give them a home on the Senate website so ordinary citizens can scrutinize where public funds are going,” Ejercito said.

- No sacred cows in Senate budget review — Lacson (2026-11-01 02:05)

MANILA, Philippines — No lawmaker will be spared scrutiny in the Senate's review of the proposed 2027 national budget as senators take a “gung-ho” approach in correcting questionable allocations and budget insertions, Sen. Panfilo Lacson said.Lacson said he and fellow members of the Senate majority bloc fully support Senate Finance Committee chairman Sen. JV Ejercito in addressing red flags in the House-approved version of the proposed General Appropriations Act. “Our attitude now is to go gung-ho. If anyone gets hit, so be it. There will be no exceptions, otherwise the exception could become the general rule,” Lacson said in an interview with One News.Asked whether the scrutiny would also cover the biggest net increase in public works allocations for the congressional district of presidential son and Ilocos Norte Rep. Sandro Marcos in the House-approved budget, Lacson replied: “Yes, absolutely.” “If we make exceptions, many will ask for exceptions and we won't succeed because there will be plea bargaining,” he said.The Senate is scheduled to resume plenary sessions on Nov. 9, when debates on the proposed 2027 budget will begin.Lacson said he already submitted his subcommittee reports on the proposed budgets of government agencies assigned to him, which are now being reviewed by the Legislative Budget Research and Monitoring Office (LBRMO). “Once the plenary sessions resume, the LBRMO would have finished its review and we can introduce amendments to restore the changes the House made to its version of the General Appropriations Bill,” he said.Lacson expressed confidence that questionable insertions would not find their way into the Senate version of the budget. “In the Senate, I don't know if someone sneaked in funds for pet projects, but I don't think so. When we in the majority bloc chat, I can feel my colleagues' sentiments,” he said.

"The investigation is ongoing to establish the full truth and ensure that anyone found to have violated the law is held accountable," he added.He also met with representatives of the crematorium and 30 pet owners.Revilla said the establishment had two cremation machines in Bacoor and in Caloocan City. "The owner admitted that some pets were brought to Caloocan for cremation. However, there is still insufficient documentation or evidence to prove that the cremations were actually carried out," the mayor said.He added that the columbarium owner could not confirm whether or not the animals that were dumped in Bulacan were among those entrusted to them.Whose ashes?Rose Ann dela Peña said she lost her dog Blue, also known as B2, on May 29.She told The Manila Times in a message early on Sunday that while B2 was not among the animals discovered in Bulacan, she was concerned about whether or not she got the ashes of her pet. "We entrusted B2 to Ahjay's, believing that we would receive her ashes and nothing else. But with everything that has come to light, how can we be sure? We deserve the truth, transparency, and proper answers from Ahjay's. We just want to make sure that the ashes we received truly belong to our beloved B2," dela Peña said. "We trusted them during one of the most painful moments of our lives. Knowing that something like this allegedly happened makes us question whether our pets were truly handled with the care, respect, and dignity they deserved… As fur parents, our pets are family. They deserve respect even after they pass away, and we deserve peace of mind knowing that they were treated properly," she added.While dela Peña welcomed the closure of the pet columbarium, she called for a thorough investigation. "We want clear answers, accountability from those responsible, and assurance that this will never happen again. I also hope the authorities will strengthen the monitoring and regulation of pet crematoriums to protect other fur parents from experiencing this kind of pain and uncertainty," she said. "We are not just talking about animals; we are talking about beloved family members entrusted to their care. Every fur parent deserves the truth, and every pet deserves a dignified farewell," she added.The Philippine Animal Welfare Society (PAWS) has called on owners of pets that were deceived to come forward and pursue legal action. "The images of the dumped bodies of the dogs and cats were shocking, although not directly a violation of the Animal Welfare Act if the animals were already deceased when they were turned over to the crematorium," PAWS said on Saturday.They pointed out that these actions constitute a grave betrayal of public trust. "Pet parents paid for a service that was supposed to provide their beloved companions with a dignified farewell. Instead, their remains were reportedly dumped like garbage in a vacant lot. This is not merely a failure to deliver a service but constitutes Estafa by means of deceit," the group said. "We urge affected pet parents to preserve their receipts, cremation certificates, communications, photographs, and other evidence, and to seek legal assistance in filing the appropriate complaint," PAWS said. "The emotional harm suffered by these pet parents must not be dismissed. They entrusted the remains of beloved family members for a dignified farewell, only to be deprived of that farewell at a particularly vulnerable moment of grief. The bond between a person and a companion animal does not end with death. The dignity with which a beloved animal is laid to rest matters deeply to those who loved and cared for them."

- American 'yields' P17.46M worth of marijuana at NAIA (2026-10-31 19:01)

MANILA, Philippines — An American passenger was arrested after the Bureau of Customs (BOC) intercepted about P17.46 million worth of marijuana kush allegedly concealed in his luggage at Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) Terminal 3.BOC Commissioner Ariel Nepomuceno said on Saturday that the foreigner, who arrived from Bangkok, Thailand, was caught on Oct. 29 by the bureau personnel in coordination with the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) and NAIA Inter-Agency Drug Interdiction Task Group (NAIA-IADITG). "He was said to be carrying two pieces of luggage containing food packages in which the suspected illegal drugs were hidden," Nepomuceno said.Reports showed that the contraband was discovered after the two checked-in luggage items showed suspicious images during X-ray screening. Customs personnel immediately conducted a physical inspection after his luggage items were subjected to K9 inspection, during which the drug-sniffing dog gave a positive indication of the possible presence of illegal drugs. The inspection yielded 15 vacuum-sealed packages of suspected marijuana kush hidden in food packets. Five packages weighing a total of 5,122 grams and valued at approximately P5.12 million were recovered from the first luggage, while 10 packages weighing 12,342 grams and worth P12.34 million were found in the second.The American passenger was subsequently arrested for allegedly bringing prohibited drugs into the country, according to BOC.Three days before the operation, the joint team also intercepted on Oct. 26 some 7,335 grams of suspected marijuana kush worth P7.33 million from unclaimed luggage at NAIA Terminal 3. The luggage also came from Bangkok, Thailand, and the suspected illegal drugs were found concealed in aluminum food pouches and sealed transparent plastic bags.In just four days, a total of 24.8 kilograms of suspected marijuana kush valued at P24.79 million were seized in two separate operations, according to BOC-NAIA District Collector Yasmin Obillos-Mapa.The successive seizures were made possible by the strict vigilance of Customs personnel and swift coordination with partner agencies to strengthen security at the airport, Obillos-Mapa said.Commending the BOC, PDEA, and NAIA-IADITG personnel for their swift and coordinated action, Nepomuceno stressed the importance of maintaining strict vigilance and coordination to prevent attempts to smuggle illegal drugs into the country.

- Chinese research ship stirs security concerns (2026-10-31 16:20)

A NATIONAL security advocate on Saturday warned that civilian scientific research could be used to conceal activities that threaten Philippine security, as a Chinese vessel carrying unidentified equipment was spotted inside Bajo de Masinloc (Scarborough Shoal), while China deployed military aircraft and naval forces around the disputed feature.Jose Antonio Goitia, chairman emeritus of the Filipinos Do Not Yield Movement, said Beijing should not be allowed to use claims of scientific research to conceal potentially military activities, stressing the Philippines' right to protect its maritime interests and demand transparency from foreign vessels operating in its maritime domain.The warning came after The Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) said it was investigating the capabilities and purpose of unidentified equipment aboard a Chinese vessel spotted inside the lagoon of Bajo de Masinloc (Scarborough Shoal), including whether the equipment could be used for underwater operations.According to the PCG, the blue-and-white vessel was first monitored on Oct. 3 and had changed its configuration several times since then.During a maritime domain awareness flight on Thursday, Oct. 29, Philippine personnel observed the vessel towing a smaller boat and carrying an orange, boat-shaped object fitted with sensors and antennas on its rear deck.The PCG cautioned against identifying the vessel as a Chinese research ship, saying its bow number and International Maritime Organization number did not match those of known Chinese research vessels.The Coast Guard sought to determine the capabilities of the equipment and whether the vessel was supporting Chinese government operations in the area.The agency was particularly examining whether the orange object was a submersible or equipment intended for underwater operations.The PCG noted that China had previously used remotely operated vehicles to conduct seabed research and said underwater drones could also be involved.However, the PCG has not established the equipment's actual function or confirmed that it was being used for surveillance.The sighting coincided with the People's Liberation Army (PLA) Southern Theater Command's announcement on Friday that Chinese naval and air forces had conducted combat-readiness patrols in the waters and airspace around Huangyan Dao, Beijing's name for Bajo de Masinloc.The PLA said it had strengthened patrols around the shoal since early October to tighten control over the surrounding waters and airspace, describing the latest operations as a response to what it called Philippine rights violations and provocative acts.Footage aired by Chinese state broadcaster CCTV-7's Junshi Baodao (Military Report) on Oct. 30 showed military aircraft and a naval vessel operating around the shoal, including scenes depicting Chinese forces monitoring a Philippine aircraft and issuing radio warnings.The broadcast did not independently establish when the encounters occurred or verify Beijing's claim that the Philippine aircraft had entered Chinese territorial airspace.Separately, the China Coast Guard said it conducted law enforcement patrols around the shoal on Friday, also citing alleged Philippine provocations.Goitia expressed concern over reports that Chinese maritime platforms described as "ghost research ships" could be used to deploy underwater drones to map submarine transit routes and collect information with potential military applications, including anti-submarine warfare.Available information, however, does not establish that the vessel spotted inside the shoal's lagoon carried out such activities."China must stop treating our waters as though they are its own. Filipinos have endured enough intimidation and harassment in our maritime domain. We have every right to know what foreign vessels are doing in our waters, and we will not accept activities that threaten our security or disregard our sovereign rights," said Goitia, who is also chairman emeritus of several civic society groups, including Alyansa ng Bantay sa Kapayapaan at Demokrasya (ABKD), and People’s Alliance for Democracy and Reforms (Pader).He cited the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (Unclos), particularly Article 246, which generally requires coastal state consent for marine scientific research in a country's exclusive economic zone and continental shelf, subject to the convention's provisions.Article 240 requires marine scientific research to be conducted exclusively for peaceful purposes.The latest developments add to tensions around Bajo de Masinloc, a longstanding flashpoint in the maritime dispute between the Philippines and China.The shoal lies about 124 nautical miles west of Zambales, within the Philippines' 200-nautical-mile exclusive economic zone.China has maintained control over access to the shoal since a 2012 standoff with the Philippines.In 2016, an arbitral tribunal ruled that Filipino fishermen had traditional fishing rights there and that China had unlawfully prevented them from exercising those rights.The tribunal also rejected China's claims to historic rights over resources within its so-called nine-dash line to the extent that they exceeded the maritime entitlements allowed under Unclos.Beijing rejects the ruling and continues to assert sovereignty over the shoal.

- Duterte to skip ICC hearing; co-conspirators’ fate unclear (2026-10-31 16:19)

FORMER president Rodrigo Duterte has waived his right to attend a Nov. 2 status conference in his crimes against humanity case before the International Criminal Court (ICC), as questions remain over why Sen. Ronald dela Rosa is the only one among eight alleged co-perpetrators publicly confirmed to face an arrest warrant.Duterte’s defense team submitted his signed waiver to ICC Trial Chamber III in a filing dated Oct. 30, complying with the chamber’s directive to formally place the document on record.The defense said Duterte notified the chamber on Oct. 28 of his decision to waive his right to attend the fifth status conference.The chamber granted his request the following day and directed his lawyers to submit a signed waiver.Duterte also instructed his lawyers to address the procedural matters on the conference agenda and any other issues that may arise during the hearing.The conference will take place before Trial Chamber III, composed of Presiding Judge Joanna Korner and Judges Keebong Paek and Nicolas Guillou, ahead of Duterte's scheduled Nov. 30 trial.Meanwhile, the ICC has not publicly explained whether arrest warrants have been issued against the seven other officials whom prosecutors identified alongside Duterte and dela Rosa as alleged co-perpetrators in the former president's anti-drug campaign.Aside from dela Rosa, the officials named in the prosecution's updated trial brief include Sen. Christopher Lawrence Go; former Philippine National Police chiefs Vicente Danao, Oscar Albayalde and the late Camilo Cascolan; former justice secretary Vitaliano Aguirre II; former National Bureau of Investigation director Dante Gierran; and former Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency chief Isidro Lapeña.Prosecutors allege that Duterte and the eight officials shared a "common plan" to neutralize people suspected of criminal activity through violent acts, including murder, from November 2011 to March 2019.However, being named in the prosecution's account does not automatically mean that an individual faces a separate charge or an arrest warrant. The ICC has not publicly confirmed warrants against the seven other officials.The ICC's Pre-Trial Chamber I issued an arrest warrant against dela Rosa under seal on Nov. 6, 2025, following a prosecution application filed three days earlier. The warrant was unsealed on May 11, 2026.The chamber found reasonable grounds to believe that dela Rosa was responsible as an indirect co-perpetrator for the crime against humanity of murder, alongside Duterte and other alleged co-perpetrators.The warrant covers killings committed between at least July 3, 2016, and the end of April 2018, when at least 32 people were killed. Dela Rosa served as PNP chief from July 1, 2016, to April 19, 2018.The chamber said the killings cited in the warrant represented a sample of a potentially broader pattern of conduct, leaving prosecutors the possibility of seeking to add other alleged criminal incidents later.Before the warrant was unsealed, an ICC spokesperson said no public arrest warrants had been issued in connection with the Philippines situation.The court later confirmed that dela Rosa's warrant had been issued confidentially before being made public.The disclosure showed that the absence of a publicly announced warrant does not necessarily mean that no sealed warrant exists.The ICC has not said whether similar warrants have been issued against other individuals named in the prosecution's account.ICC-accredited counsel Ross Tugade said in February that the identification of alleged co-perpetrators raised the possibility that the court was considering arrest warrants against them.In its April confirmation-of-charges decision, however, the Pre-Trial Chamber clarified that references to the alleged co-perpetrators did not constitute a determination of their criminal responsibility.

- Image of soldiers backing dela Rosa fake, Army says (2026-10-31 16:18)

THE Philippine Army's 10th Infantry Division has denounced an AI-generated image falsely portraying its troops endorsing the fugitive senator Ronald dela Rosa, warning that the fabricated image misrepresents the military's political neutrality.In a "Fake News Alert" issued over the weekend, the 10th Infantry (Agila) Division said the image circulating on social media falsely depicted its personnel expressing political support for dela Rosa.The division said the manipulated image could mislead the public and undermine the professionalism and political neutrality of military personnel.The image showed armed soldiers posing on an armored vehicle in front of the division's main gate while holding a banner bearing the words,

“We support Senator Bato dela Rosa.” The circulating social media card carried a post attributed to the “1st Infantry Tabak Division Philippine Army” page and posted by a user identified as Regis Paller Enrique. Its caption read, “good job we salute 10ID troopers.” The 10ID urged the public to verify information through official sources before sharing unverified posts, stressing that its official positions and statements are communicated only through authorized channels.It also reiterated its commitment to serving Filipinos without political affiliation or preference and condemned the misuse of artificial intelligence to misrepresent its personnel.Dela Rosa, in hiding since November 2025, is wanted by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for crimes against humanity, in relation to his role as police chief during the Duterte administration’s bloody war on drugs, in which thousands of suspects were killed. Former president Rodrigo Duterte is already in The Hague, awaiting trial.

- 29 dead pets found dumped in Bulacan (2026-10-31 16:17)

TWENTY-SIX dogs and three cats were found dumped in a vacant lot in San Jose Del Monte, Bulacan, inside individual plastic bags that had names and weight specifications labeled on them, an animal welfare group said over the weekend.Luna and Furry Siblings, on a Facebook post late Friday, said the 29 pets were “thrown away like trash” in the vacant lot.The animals are identified as Sakura, Sweet, Brandon, Dara, Red, Dos, Ivy, Jedy, Crunch, Akira, and Jennifer, who are all dogs, while the cats’ names are Ira, Lucky, and Chelsea. Two dogs shared the name Brandon.The group also posted several live videos and, on Saturday, returned to the vacant lot where they discovered the animals, saying the owners of an unnamed pet crematorium admitted that they handled these animals. “We are waiting, just to make sure that’s in writing and as soon as it’s done, we’re going to release the name and hopefully retrieve these pets. We will update everybody on this and let you guys know what’s happening,” the group said in a live video on Saturday.The animal rescue service also said the dogs and cats will be reburied in another location.The Manila Times has tried reaching out to the animal rescue service but has not returned calls as of press time.A pet crematorium based in Cavite was named as the one behind the dumping of the animals, and has since deactivated its Facebook and Instagram pages following the discovery of the pets.The Manila Times also tried reaching the pet crematorium on Saturday.Luna and Furry Siblings, along with the Animal Kingdom Foundation, called on pet owners who recently lost their pets to check the records.The animal rescue service tapped an animal clinic to lend them a microchip scanner to find a registration chip on the animals but said none of them had one. “Did you trust a clinic, handler, or aftercare provider with a pet matching one of these names and weights? If you paid a business to handle your pet’s remains with dignity, they may have defrauded you and dumped them in a vacant lot instead,” Luna and Furry Siblings wrote. “Please check your vet records and receipts. If you recognize your pet’s name and weight, message us privately right now. Your paperwork will be the smoking gun we need to nail the exact establishment responsible for this heartless, illegal act... We cannot rest. We need the power of the internet to find the owners of Sakura, Brandon, Chelsea, and the rest of these babies,” they added.Youth organization Angat Kabataang San Joseño called on the local government of San Jose del Monte and other appropriate authorities to conduct a thorough investigation and identify those responsible. “We hope that available CCTV footage, witness accounts, and other pieces of evidence will be properly examined to establish what truly happened. We also urge the authorities to take the necessary steps to prevent similar incidents from happening again,” the group said on Friday night. “We believe that animal welfare should not be taken lightly. This incident deserves proper attention, and those found responsible must be held accountable in accordance with the law,” they added.Animal Kingdom Foundation on Saturday called on the public to search for the pets’ owners and to trace those responsible for dumping the 29 dogs and cats. “We are appealing to pet owners who recently lost a pet or availed cremation and aftercare services in SJDM and nearby areas to check their records and receipts,” the foundation said on Saturday. “Someone entrusted these animals’ remains to a service provider. They deserved dignity, not to be dumped like garbage,” they added.Not the first timeThe foundation also said that it was not the first time a case of animal dumping happened this year alone. “Similar reports of animal dumping surfaced as early as May, when only two dogs were identified. Now, another disturbing incident involving 29 dogs has been reported in San Jose del Monte, Bulacan,” Animal Kingdom Foundation said on Saturday. “The pattern is alarming. These animals were not simply abandoned; they were discarded, as if their lives meant nothing,” it added.

- Leo XIV is 1st pope to vote in a US poll (2026-10-31 16:16)

VATICAN CITY — Pope Leo XIV has become the first pontiff to vote in a US general election, casting a mail-in ballot in a contest that will decide America's political future as the Trump era slowly comes to an end.The Vatican confirmed Friday that the Chicago-born pontiff had submitted a mail-in ballot in the city ahead of the Nov. 3 midterm elections, citing his long-standing belief in civic participation.Leo, formerly Robert Prevost, “has exercised his right to vote as a United States citizen," as he has done “whenever he was eligible to do so,” the Holy See press office said.The statement said he had also voted while living in Peru, where he lived as a missionary priest and bishop for over 20 years. “The Holy Father expresses his belief in the right and the duty of citizens to participate in democratic processes,” it added.Leo holds US and Peruvian citizenship, and is also the head of state of a foreign country, the Holy See. The city-state is an absolute monarchy with no political elections.US federal law allows citizens living abroad, even those working for foreign governments, to vote via absentee ballot. Americans working for foreign governments aren’t automatically at risk of forfeiting their US citizenship, though the US State Department says on its website that it may “actively review” the citizenship status of Americans who “serve as a foreign head of state, foreign head of government, or foreign minister.”This election, Illinois voters are deciding whether to elect Illinois Gov. JB Pritzker to his third term, and they’re also filling an open US Senate seat after longtime Catholic Democrat Dick Durbin’s retirement. There are no statewide issues on the Illinois ballot.President Donald Trump is not on the ballot, but he has campaigned hard to try to preserve Republican control of the US House and Senate for the final two years of his second term.The pope, registered at a New Lenox, Illinois, address, requested a mail-in ballot on Oct. 3, said Kim Fladhammer, chief of staff to the Will County clerk, on Friday. The Chicago Sun-Times first reported the request.The request was made just 10 days before Leo underwent surgery to remove a cancerous tumor from his right lung. Leo has been slowly resuming his activities at the Vatican after being released from the hospital on Oct. 17.It is unclear how Leo returned the ballot. The pope's older brother, John Prevost, was in Rome this week accompanying parishioners from St. Jude’s, an Augustinian-run parish in New Lenox, Illinois. The elder Prevost attends Mass there, and Leo gave a talk at the parish in 2024 while still a cardinal.Prevost's past votes have gone Democratic and Republican.Since 2000, Robert Prevost has voted in five primary elections, requesting Democratic ballots twice and Republican ballots three times, according to records held by the Illinois State Board of Elections.The records do not show which candidates he supported. Illinois voters must declare a party preference to receive a primary ballot. No such declaration is required in general elections.While registered in heavily Democratic Cook County, Prevost requested Democratic primary ballots in 2008 and 2010. After moving to the more conservative suburban Will County, he requested Republican primary ballots in 2012, 2014 and 2016.The records also show that he submitted ballots in every general election since 2000 except those in 2020 and 2022.Clashes with TrumpSince becoming pope, Leo has drawn criticism from Trump for repeatedly condemning the US-Israeli war in Iran and calling for dignified treatment of immigrants, following the Trump administration’s crackdown and mass deportation program.Earlier this year, Trump called Leo “weak” and captive to the “radical left,” kicking off a remarkable back-and-forth public argument that dominated Leo's April trip to Africa.Responding to Trump, Leo told reporters en route to Algeria: “I’m not afraid of the Trump administration or of speaking out loudly about the message of the Gospel, which is what the church works for.” The public dispute has subsided in recent months. “We try to let things pass if there are misunderstandings,” the Vatican foreign minister, Archbishop Richard Paul Gallagher, told reporters this week. "With anybody, we would be looking to approach it and say, ‘OK, there may be a misunderstanding, let’s move on and try to rebuild trust and confidence.’” Leo and Trump have not spoken by phone since the pope's May 2025 election. Last week, however, Leo spoke with Russian President Vladimir Putin and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy about the humanitarian crisis in the Ukrainian city of Oleshky.Asked why Trump and Leo haven't spoken, Gallagher said the Holy See has found a capable conduit in the US ambassador to the Holy See, Brian Burch, and hadn't needed to elevate any issue higher.A pope who follows US politics closelyLeo has made clear on several occasions that he follows local and national US politics closely and is not afraid to intervene.Recently, Leo reiterated official church teaching declaring the death penalty “inadmissible.” He made the pronouncement in a social media post on the World Day Against the Death Penalty, which came as the US announced plans to livestream an execution by firing squad. The plans were later scrapped.In 2025, Leo intervened in a debate over abortion, after Chicago Cardinal Blase Cupich announced plans to give a lifetime achievement award to Sen. Dick Durbin. The plans drew objection from some conservative US bishops given the powerful Democratic senator’s support for abortion rights.Leo called for respect for both sides, but he also pointed out the contradiction between people who call themselves “pro-life” but also support the death penalty.Also in 2025, Leo said he was “very disappointed” that his home state of Illinois approved a law allowing medically assisted dying, which is condemned by the Catholic Church.The US Conference of Catholic Bishops, in a note commenting on the confirmation of Leo's midterm vote, urged Catholics to put "our faith before our politics" and uphold human dignity and the common good."As Catholics and Americans, we are blessed to be able to participate in our nation's political and public life," said the conference's director of public affairs, Chieko Noguchi. "In voting, our Holy Father sets the example that encourages each citizen to exercise their civic responsibility."

- Senate chief assures business community (2026-10-31 16:15)

SENATE President Sherwin Gatchalian on Saturday assured the country's business sector that senators will rigorously vet the proposed P7.2-trillion 2027 national budget, promising to strip away all politically driven, technically baseless congressional insertions.The statement comes in direct response to a joint manifesto issued by major business groups on Oct. 29, 2026, which raised grave concerns over P180 billion in realignments introduced by the House of Representatives under House Bill 10858.Gatchalian welcomed the private sector's vigilance and maintained that a clean budget can be delivered without delaying its timely passage.Projects to be purgedGatchalian said a formal recall of the House-approved General Appropriations Bill is unnecessary.Instead, the Senate will address the discrepancies through its own rigorous committee and plenary review processes."The Senate Committee on Finance will remove from the General Appropriations Bill all projects lacking supporting documents, such as feasibility studies, programs of work, resolutions from the LGUs (local government units), and other required documents," Gatchalian said.To ensure public oversight, the Senate leader also committed to deep transparency reforms."We will continue the transparency reforms by uploading all relevant information to the Senate Transparency Portal," he added.Furthermore, Gatchalian asserted that the Senate will remove unconstitutional and lump-sum provisions previously flagged by the Supreme Court — specifically tightening safeguards on unprogrammed appropriations — while keeping final spending strictly within the president's recommended ceiling in the National Expenditure Program (NEP).Massive realignmentThe business community's joint call exposed a massive realignment by the House Budget Amendments and Review Subcommittee (Barsc), which added over P180 billion to the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) allocation.The adjustments reportedly inflated the DPWH project registry by 6,212 items — bringing the total to 16,270 projects — many of which are classified as vague lump-sum entries for multi-purpose buildings and bypass roads, lacking named proponents or published project lists.Of greater concern to the business sector was the source of the funding. The House reportedly carved out P130 billion from rigorously prepared, foreign-assisted infrastructure projects, P9.5 billion from calamity funds, P4.9 billion from vital health care programs, and P1.76 billion from the EDSA Busway project."Raiding calamity funds in a country that is exposed to disasters is indefensible," the business groups said in their manifesto, warning that cutting foreign-assisted projects delays high-impact infrastructure needed to reduce logistics costs and attract capital.The sector noted that past unvetted insertions between 2023 and 2025 resulted in "ghost and substandard flood control projects" that wasted public funds.Signatories to the manifesto were the Makati Business Club, Management Association of the Philippines, Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Financial Executives Institute of the Philippines, Federation of Philippine Industries, Foundation for Economic Freedom, Judicial Reform Initiative, Cebu Business Club, Cebu Chamber of Commerce & Industry, Alyansa Agrikultura, and the Move As One Coalition.Not an election fundIn response to fears that the allocations could be weaponized ahead of upcoming political cycles, Gatchalian firmly rejected the label of an "election budget."He emphasized that the final 2027 appropriations will be a growth and resilience budget explicitly mapped out to address inflation, job creation, food security, health care and disaster readiness.The Senate is scheduled to begin its plenary deliberations on Nov. 9, 2026. Both the Senate leadership and the business community agree that eliminating baseless insertions can be achieved comfortably within the current legislative calendar, thereby averting the economic risks of a reenacted budget."Investors, at home and abroad, read the national budget as a statement of how seriously a government takes integrity and value for money," the business sector statement read, adding that they will closely monitor the legislative process through to its final enactment.

- Road Crash Victims Day guidelines issued (2026-10-31 16:15)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. signed Memorandum Circular 139 on Oct. 26, providing guidelines for this year’s observance of the National Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims, Survivors and Their Families on Nov. 15.” The 2026 National Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims, Survivors and Their Families will be observed on the third Sunday of November with the theme, ‘Remember. Reflect. Act. Save Lives,’ and its successful observance will require the active participation of all concerned government agencies and instrumentalities, as well as the support of local government units and the private sector,” the memorandum read.Republic Act 11468, also known as the National Day of Remembrance for Road Crash Victims, Survivors and Their Families Act, is a Philippine law approved on Jan. 23, 2020, during the administration of former president Rodrigo Duterte.Its main purpose is to honor people who lost their lives in road crashes, recognize survivors and their families, and promote road safety awareness throughout the country.The law promotes better support for road crash victims, survivors and their families. It recognizes that road crashes do not only affect the individuals involved. They also affect families, communities and society.The Department of Transportation was tasked to provide guidelines for all programs and activities, while the Presidential Communications Office will promote public awareness of the event.

- Lopez orders completion of stalled DPWH projects (2026-10-31 16:14)

PUBLIC Works Secretary Giovanni Lopez said he has ordered the completion of all projects under the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH).Lopez issued the statement during the reopening of a road in Tuba, Benguet, on Fridaay.” If you recall, Secretary Vince Dizon visited this site in May 2026, and iThe nstructed the regional director and district engineering officials to address the problem here,” Lopez said.President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.

recently ordered a Cabinet reshuffle where Dizon and Lopez swapped places. Dizon returned to head the Department of Transportation to address mass transit and daily commuter issues, while Lopez assumed leadership of the DPWH to institutionalize ongoing anti-corruption and transparency reforms.The road in Benguet, Lopez said, had been operating on a one-way basis since 2025, causing inconvenience to residents and motorists.Lopez said the concerned DPWH officials were ordered to complete the work in five months.” We will hold them to their commitment,” he said.Lopez added that President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. wants the road opened for the All Saints’ Day travel rush.” The President’s instruction is that whatever commitments Secretary Vince made and whatever projects were delayed must be continued,” he said.” That commitment is not just to the President or to Secretary Vince. Above all, it is a commitment to the Filipino people,” Lopez added.

- Govt favors public-private partnerships for airports (2026-10-31 16:12)

TRANSPORTATION Secretary Vince Dizon said on Saturday that the government is determined to pursue more public-private partnerships (PPPs) to improve airports around the country.The order of President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., Dizon said, is to pursue PPP arrangements for as many airports as possible.” Clearly, we can see the difference in security, comfort and shorter queues,” Dizon said, comparing airports operated under PPP arrangements with those still managed by the government.He cited Ninoy Aquino International Airport, Clark International Airport and Mactan-Cebu International Airport as examples.” There’s a huge difference when we compare these airports with those that have not yet been placed under PPP arrangements,” Dizon said, noting such joint ventures would help accelerate the improvement of passenger services.” We still have a lot to improve, but things have gotten much better and travel has become more convenient. We can make these improvements faster and more efficiently through public-private partnerships because the government alone cannot do it,” he said.This comes as the government prepares to host the upcoming Asean Summit.Dizon said the Department of Transportation is in coordination with the Asean Organizing Committee on how the summit could impact flight schedules.

- Strait of Hormuz attack prompts heightened alert (2026-10-31 16:11)

THE Department of Migrant Workers and the Philippine Embassy in Muscat said strict monitoring of vessels transiting the Strait of Hormuz was being implemented due to the high number of Filipino seafarers navigating these high-risk waters.This comes after official reports from the Omani Maritime Security Center and regional maritime agencies confirmed that 25 sailors were safely evacuated and provided medical care after their vessel was attacked off Musandam Governorate on Oct. 30.Authorities have not yet released the crew manifest of those aboard.The incident happened during a sharp surge in maritime hostilities across the vital shipping corridor. Reports from regional monitors and Iran’s Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps cited a wave of tanker interceptions, hull explosions from attached explosive devices and alleged naval mine strikes affecting commercial traffic.The recurring security threats in the region prompted Philippine labor authorities to enforce protective measures for Filipino maritime workers.Under these official protocols, mariners retain the right to refuse deployment into designated high-risk or warlike zones, while those continuing transit are entitled to double compensation and immediate repatriation if their vessels are targeted.

• Ordanes pushes national artist category for culinary arts (2026-10-31 16:10)

SENIOR Citizens Party-list Rep. Rodolfo Ordanes on Saturday urged the National Commission for Culture and the Arts (NCCA) and the Cultural Center of the Philippines (CCP) to establish a national artist category for culinary arts.This comes as Philippine restaurants gain more Michelin recognition, an award bestowed upon a restaurant by the Michelin Guide, one of the world's oldest, most prestigious and influential fine-dining evaluation systems.Culinary arts are not currently recognized as a separate category under the Order of National Artists, a gap he said deserves serious consideration by the two cultural institutions."As Philippine cuisine gains wider international recognition, we must also honor the leading practitioners who have preserved, developed and elevated our country's culinary traditions," Ordanes said in a statement."The culinary arts are not yet recognized as a separate category under the Order of National Artists. This deserves serious consideration by the NCCA and CCP," he added.He called on leading Philippine universities to conduct scholarly research documenting the foundations, diversity and distinct traditions of the country's cuisines.Ordanes emphasized the use of "Philippine cuisines" in the plural, saying the country's culinary heritage extends beyond well-known dishes such as adobo, sinigang, kare-kare, lechon and sisig."Establishing a National Artist category for Culinary Arts would bring greater national and international attention to Filipino culinary excellence," Ordanes said."It would also shine a spotlight on the many chefs, cooks, food service workers, farmers, fisherfolk and livestock raisers who sustain our rich food traditions," he added.Establishing a new national artist category, he said, would also pave the way for the recognition of the communities, traditions and people behind the food that makes the Philippines proud.In its second Philippine edition, the Michelin Guide recognized 19 new food establishments across Manila, Cebu, Pampanga and Cavite, bringing the total number of honorees this year to 127.Among the new Bib Gourmand awardees are Apag Marangle and Tito Boy in Pampanga; Balay Dako and Bawai's Vietnamese Kitchen in Cavite; Azela in Manila; Tatang's Lechon and Kalipay in Cebu; and C.H.E. Bacolod Chicken House Express in Makati.

• Marcos approves climate change event guidelines (2026-10-31 16:09)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has approved the guidelines for the observance of the Global Warming and Climate Change Consciousness Week on Nov. 19 to 25.Released through Executive Secretary Ralph Recto, Memorandum Circular 140 orders government bodies, government-owned and -controlled corporations, and state universities and colleges to participate in the event."The 2026 Global Warming and Climate Change Consciousness Week will be celebrated nationwide from 19 to 25 November 2026, to be led by the Climate Change Commission (CCC) under the theme, 'Komunidad, Kooperasyon at Koordinasyon para sa Klima,' and its successful celebration will require the active participation of all concerned government agencies and instrumentalities, as well as the support of local government units, educational institutions, civil society organizations and the private sector," the memorandum read.The CCC is the government's primary policymaking agency on climate issues under Republic Act 9729 and its amendment, Republic Act 10174.The funding for the initiative will come from each agency's existing budget, following standard budget, accounting and auditing rules. The Presidential Communications Office, meanwhile, was instructed to raise public awareness on the event.

- Network anchor posts bail over cyber libel charges (2026-10-31 16:07)

CJ Hirro, known as an anchor of the Peanut Gallery Media Network (PGMN), appeared on Friday at the Regional Trial Court Branch 90 in Quezon City and posted bail of over P300,000 after a warrant of arrest was issued against her for seven counts of cyber libel by former congressman Marvin Rillo.Hirro posted bail of P336,000 in cash and was granted provisional liberty.In a statement on her Facebook page late Friday, Hirro said she respects the court's authority and thanked her legal team and colleagues. "I respect the authority of the Court and wish to express my sincere appreciation to the Court and its personnel for the prompt, orderly and efficient processing of my bail, particularly given the limited court hours preceding the long weekend. I am equally grateful to my legal team and colleagues at Peanut Gallery Media Network for their efforts to ensure that I could promptly comply with the Court's requirements," Hirro wrote. "The P336,000 bail is a substantial amount, particularly for private citizens who must rely on their own resources and the support of people willing to help. Unlike public officials whose salaries, allowances and official expenses are funded by taxpayers, ordinary citizens bear the financial consequences of defending themselves in court. It is a distinction worth keeping in mind when publicly discussing the financial burden of legal proceedings," she added.Hirro said that the cyber libel case stemmed from her reporting on the former lawmaker. "My reporting concerning the P71-million Carlos L. Albert High School gymnasium project was recognized as fair comment based on official government documents. A separate video questioning where public funds had gone was likewise found to concern a legitimate matter of public interest, resulting in the dismissal of that portion of the complaint. The complaints against PGMN's officers, including its President and CEO, Franco Mabanta, were also dismissed," she wrote. "These findings are particularly significant given the evidence underlying my reporting. Official bidding documents for the P71-million gymnasium project included roofing, floor tiles, doors and windows, but more than a year after the project was promised, the site had little more than foundations and posts to show for it. Mr. Rillo's camp claimed that this was only the first phase of construction, despite the absence of any indication in the original project documents that it was intended to be implemented in phases, or any identified funding for subsequent phases. Even assuming that explanation were true, it does not account for the glaring disparity between the P71-million allocation and the construction actually delivered. The public deserves an answer to that discrepancy. Mr. Rillo has had every opportunity to explain it. He chose to file a case against the journalist instead," Hirro added.The online anchor said the warrant of arrest against her is "a preliminary finding of probable cause, not a vindication of Mr. Rillo’s allegations,” and she was not surprised by that.“I welcome the opportunity to present the evidence supporting my investigative reports and the findings I discussed in my episodes. My reporting concerned matters of legitimate public interest, particularly the conduct of an elected official, the use of public resources and representations made to the electorate. I stand by my work and am prepared to defend its factual and evidentiary foundations before the Court,” Hirro stated.“I have no intention of apologizing for doing my job as a journalist. I have no intention of retracting findings that I believe are supported by evidence. And I certainly have no intention of abandoning my responsibility to scrutinize public officials and how they exercise the authority entrusted to them by the Filipino people,” she added.PGMN is known as an online news and commentary platform established by Franco Mabanta in 2024, while a former host at TV networks such as PTV-4 and Net-25.

- Police, medical responders monitor Manila cemeteries (2026-10-31 16:06)

AT least 10,500 people visited Manila North Cemetery as of 12 noon on Saturday, according to the Manila Police District (MPD), as police personnel continued to ensure the safety of visitors paying respects to their deceased loved ones.Meanwhile, the Manila City Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Department (MCDRRMD) deployed its Emergency Medical Services team to different areas of Manila North Cemetery to provide immediate medical assistance to visitors.Volunteers also assisted medical responders in providing services to the public.Members of the Incident Management Team also visited the cemetery to inspect the readiness and condition of responders stationed in the area.The MCDRRMD also deployed its Emergency Medical Services team at Manila South Cemetery to provide immediate medical assistance to visitors, with volunteers assisting the responders.Manila City Mayor Francisco ”Isko Moreno” Domagoso earlier said the city government had completed its preparations for Undas 2026 after 10 days of coordination among various offices and agencies, including the MPD and MCDRRMD. He also said vendors would not be allowd inside cemeteries, with designated selling areas provided outside their perimeters.Security deploymentAt least 270 police officers have been deployed at the Manila North Cemetery to maintain peace and order as thousands of Filipinos visit their departed loved ones for All Saints’ Day on Nov. 1 and All Souls’ Day on Nov. 2.Police Lt. Col. Jolliet Soriano, MPD Station 3 commander and ground commander of the cemetery’s security deployment, said officers have been stationed at strategic points, including gates and passageways, to manage the expected influx of visitors and ensure public safety.The deployment is part of a wider security operation of the National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO), which deployed 12,848 personnel across Metro Manila as of 6 a.m. on Saturday, with nearly 1,000 more scheduled to reinforce security through Nov. 2.Police Lt. Col. Hazel Asilo, NCRPO spokesman, said no untoward incidents had been monitored at cemeteries and transport terminals as of Saturday morning.The Philippine National Police (PNP) placed all its units nationwide on full alert from Oct. 30 until Nov. 3, mobilizing about 141,000 police personnel and augmentation forces to secure cemeteries, transportation hubs and other areas expected to draw large crowds.In Metro Manila, about 25,000 personnel are available for Undas security operations, with around 7,000 assigned to priority areas, including cemeteries, major roads and transport hubs, NCRPO regional director Brig. Gen. Christopher Nortez Abrahano said.More than 3,600 police officers have also been assigned to patrol communities to deter criminal activity while residents visit cemeteries or travel to their home provinces.Mobile patrols will cover major roads, while foot patrols, in coordination with barangay officials and other force multipliers, will monitor residential areas where houses may be left unattended.Police are also monitoring commercial establishments and other areas to prevent crimes during the holiday period.The security preparations at Manila North Cemetery followed an Oct. 30 inspection by PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr., Abrahano and MPD director Brig. Gen. Arnold Santiago, who assessed the cemetery’s readiness ahead of the observance.More than 1,000 people had visited Manila North Cemetery as of Oct. 30, according to police figures. The NCRPO recorded about 1.8 million cemetery visitors across Metro Manila during last year’s observance.Asilo clarified that cemetery administrators and their designated personnel are responsible for inspecting bags and screening visitors at entrances, while police provide secondary security and assistance when needed.Police officers are also authorized to patrol inside cemeteries to prevent incidents and respond to requests for assistance.Authorities are enforcing cemetery rules and local ordinances, including restrictions on bladed weapons and other prohibited items. Police assistance desks have been set up at transport terminals, where officers are also making public-address announcements, reminding passengers to stay vigilant.Asilo urged cemetery visitors to safeguard their belongings against pickpockets and other thieves, particularly as crowds increase.She also encouraged victims of theft to file formal complaints against suspects to facilitate appropriate legal action.The NCRPO said it would continue to assess security requirements and adjust deployments based on crowd movement and other developments during the observance, including the possible return of travelers from the provinces after the holidays.Cemetery securityThe NCRPO is enforcing existing cemetery rules and local ordinances, including restrictions on bladed weapons and other prohibited items.Asilo urged cemetery visitors to guard their belongings against pickpockets and other thieves, particularly as crowds grow during the observance.She encouraged victims of theft to file formal complaints against suspects to ensure that appropriate legal action can be taken.The NCRPO also advised residents to remain alert to possible criminal activity in crowded areas and to avoid leaving their mobile phones and other valuables unattended.Asilo said police will continue to monitor the situation and adjust deployments based on security assessments and the movement of people during the All Saints’ Day and All Souls’ Day period.

- Govt officials visit injured OFWs in Saudi attack (2026-10-31 16:05)

PHILIPPINE Ambassador to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia Raymond Balatbat and Migrant Workers Secretary Hans Leo Cacdac visited overseas Filipino workers (OFWs) who survived the Oct. 10 terrorist attacks at the King Khalid International Airport.Also present during the visit on Oct. 27 were Migrant Workers Undersecretary Jainal Rasul Jr., and labor officials Dominador Salanga, Solaiman Mutia and Geraldine Mendez.The Oct. 10 incident marked the third and deadliest attack targeting the prominent Riyadh aviation hub within a single week. The Saudi General Authority of Civil Aviation reported that the projectile strikes — claimed by Yemen-based Houthi forces using a combination of drones, cruise missiles and ballistic missiles — killed at least 13 individuals and wounded over 300 others.Among the fatalities were citizens from the United States, Egypt, Bangladesh, Jordan, Syria, Palestine, Sudan and Pakistan.Despite the threat, Cacdac said that the government is not considering a deployment ban to Saudi Arabia, noting the country’s strong commitment to protecting foreign nationals.The Philippine Embassy has issued a stern reminder to all Filipinos in Saudi Arabia to maintain heightened vigilance and strictly avoid military installations, oil refineries and crowded public sectors.

- Coalition seeks justice for slain labor leaders (2026-10-31 16:04)

THE Nagkaisa labor coalition on Saturday called for justice for slain workers and protection for laborers’ rights.As the nation remembers All Saints’ Day, it said the government should hear the cry for justice for the families of slain labor leaders like Emmanuel “Manny” Asuncion, Leonides “Dennis” Sequeña and Orlando “Ka Lando” Abangan.”While travel arrangements are being made for those visiting graves, ensure that justice also moves forward for those laid to rest and that the families they left behind have a means of livelihood,” the coalition said in a statement issued by its convenors Sonny Matula, Judy Ann Chan Miranda and Josua Mata.”Bury the dead, but do not bury their cases,” it added.The coalition reiterated its call for the lifting of the injunction issued by the Pasig Regional Trial Court Branch 152 against a wage increase in the National Capital Region. The Office of the Solicitor General, it said, should submit its required comment on the case without seeking another extension.”What should be increased is wages, not extensions of time. Families’ meals cannot be put on hold while paperwork is delayed,” Nagkaisa said.”A just wage recognizes the contribution of labor to the economy. Workers need it now as they work every day to provide for their families and the country,” it added.

- Malabon opens new crematory, interment building (2026-10-31 16:03)

Malabon Mayor Jeannie Sandoval led the inauguration of the city's new crematory and interment building at Tugatog Public Cemetery, expanding its funeral, cremation, and interment services.The inauguration was followed by the blessing of 51 urns and the cremation of 20 remains under the city government's free cremation program, Sandoval told The Manila Times on Saturday.She said families attended the ceremony to offer prayers and honor the memory of their departed loved ones ahead of All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day collectively called ‘Undas.’ Built on a 417.50-square-meter lot, the new facility has two main structures: the administrative building and the crematory and interment place; both are dedicated to providing spaces for administrative operations and funeral-related services for families in need of assistance, City Administrator Alex Rosete said in a separate Viber interview.The administrative building houses an office, a conference area, storage space, a pantry, restrooms, and a porch and waiting area for visitors—facilities that support day-to-day operations and serve both personnel and the public, Rosete said.The crematory and interment building contains a crematory and service area, two chapels with a transition area, and a waiting area, giving families designated areas for cremation-related services and gatherings where they can pay their last respects."We continue to improve our facilities to meet the needs of our fellow residents. Proper preparation and coordination are important to ensure that the services provided by our city government are appropriate, orderly, and delivered with care for every ‘Malabueño’ household," Sandoval said.The inauguration comes nearly a year after the October 21, 2025 opening of the first phase of The Risen Christ Hall, a multi-storey, apartment-style tomb facility with 360 niches where families can lay their departed loved ones to rest. “That facility was also inaugurated ahead of the Undas observance to add interment spaces for residents,” the city officials said.Residents and visitors were urged to follow cemetery rules, dispose of garbage properly, secure their belongings, and observe traffic advisories and instructions of personnel deployed to assist the public, according to Rosete.

- Lending your vehicle for Undas? Here’s how to avoid being flagged as colorum (2026-10-31 16:02)

AS government agencies ramp up their anti-colorum campaign this holiday season, and during the observance of All Saints’ Day and All Souls’ Day (Undas), a transport group reminded private vehicle owners of their rights and responsibilities when lending out their cars.The reminder came after the Department of Transportation, along with its attached agencies — the Land Transportation Office and Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board (LTFRB), and Highway Patrol Group — tightened flagging down of suspected colorum vehicles. “But what exactly constitutes colorum and when is a private vehicle simply on a legitimate private trip?” asked lawyer Ariel Inton, founder of Lawyers for Commuters Safety and Protection (LCSP).He explained that a vehicle is considered colorum if it is a private unit used for hire without a franchise or with an expired one; a vehicle that has a franchise but is used under a different denomination — for example, a school bus franchise operating as a UV (utility vehicle) Express; and a vehicle that is operating out of line, such as a unit with a Cubao-to-Antipolo route but plying Cavite. “Even ’ vans for hire advertised on Facebook are considered colorum if they operate without a franchise,” Inton told The Manila Times via Viber interview.But the issue becomes murky during the holiday season, particularly Undas, when families typically travel together, he said. What happens if a private vehicle owner lends his van to a friend or relative for a family outing — and enforcers flag the vehicle down on suspicion of being colorum?The LCSP founder said that if the vehicle was merely borrowed and no rent was paid, it is not colorum.But law enforcers may still pressure the driver and passengers based on “reasonable suspicion.” “They would insist that a private vehicle must be for private trips and not for public use,” Inton said.To avoid being wrongly flagged, the LCSP head said drivers and the passengers should bring identification cards (IDs) to prove their familial relationship.Bring an authorization letter indicating the destination and the relationship between the owner and the borrower, such as child or sibling, and always keep the official receipt, certificate of registration and other supporting documents for presentation to enforcers, said Inton, a former Quezon City councilor and an LTFRB official. “Pick up passengers at one meeting place. If you pick up passengers, especially in areas where for-hire vehicles pass, and enforcers are watching, you may be suspected of operating as a public utility vehicle," he said. "Talk calmly with enforcers. Maintain a respectful tone when dealing with the authorities who flagged you down," he added.Expressing its full support for the government's campaign, the LCSP said authorities should focus on going after colorum syndicates — groups that are genuinely making a living out of illegal transport operations.Inton said his group was also concerned that some colorum operators may have informants and are paying off officials, which is why they continue to operate openly to this day.

• Marcos urges Filipinos to honor departed loved ones through kindness (2026-10-31 16:01)

MANILA, Philippines — As the country observes All Saints' Day, President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. implored Filipinos to honor their departed loved ones through acts of compassion and service. "I join the Catholic faithful and the entire Filipino nation in the solemn observance of All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day," Marcos said in his message.Many Filipinos are expected to visit the grave of their departed loved ones to honor their memory.As they travel to visit their departed loved ones, Marcos said honoring their lives is what keeps the nation strong. "Even in their absence, those we have lost continue to bring us closer together, keeping alive the bonds that have made the Filipino family and the whole nation resilient and strong through challenges," he said.The Chief Executive also highlighted the Filipino's strong devotion to saints, which he said inspires the nation to "find lasting purpose in every kindness we give and every burden we help carry for others." "If we can make time to revere those who have passed, we can also make room to listen to those who struggle, and let that same concern guide our society and the work of government," he said. "May these solemn days bring peace to those who mourn and remind us to cherish those who remain," Marcos added.

• Research or spy ship? Maritime expert sees presence of Chinese vessel inside disputed Bajo de Masinloc 'threat to PH security' (2026-10-31 08:29)

MANILA, Philippines — A Chinese "scientific research vessel," escorted by China's military aircraft and naval forces, was spotted inside Bajo de Masinloc or Scarborough Shoal carrying unidentified equipment, which could be used to conceal activities that could threaten national security, according to an expert on Saturday.Jose Antonio Goitia said Beijing should not be allowed to use claims of scientific research to conceal potential military activities, stressing the Philippines' right to protect its maritime interests and demand transparency from foreign vessels operating in its maritime domain.The warning came after the Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) reported the presence of an unidentified orange, boat-shaped object fitted with sensors and antennas aboard a Chinese vessel seen inside the shoal's lagoon on Oct. 30.The PCG has yet to determine the equipment's intended function or establish whether the vessel conducted underwater surveillance or deployed autonomous underwater vehicles.The sighting coincided with the People's Liberation Army (PLA) Southern Theater Command's announcement on Friday that Chinese naval and air forces had conducted combat-readiness patrols in the waters and airspace around Huangyan Dao, Beijing's name for Bajo de Masinloc.The PLA said it had strengthened patrols around the shoal since early October to tighten control over the surrounding waters and airspace, describing the latest operations as a response to what it called Philippine rights violations and provocative acts.Footage aired by Chinese state broadcaster CCTV-7's Junshi Baodao (Military Report) on Oct. 30 showed military aircraft and a naval vessel operating around the shoal, including scenes depicting Chinese forces monitoring a Philippine aircraft and issuing radio warnings.The broadcast did not independently establish when the encounters occurred or verify Beijing's claim that the Philippine aircraft had entered Chinese territorial airspace.Separately, the China Coast Guard said it conducted law-enforcement patrols around the shoal on Friday, also citing alleged Philippine provocations.Goitia expressed concern over reports that Chinese maritime platforms described as "ghost research ships" could be used to deploy underwater drones to map submarine transit routes and collect information with potential military applications, including anti-submarine warfare.Available information, however, does not establish that the vessel spotted inside the shoal's lagoon carried out such activities."China must stop treating our waters as though they are its own. Filipinos have endured enough intimidation and harassment in our maritime domain. We have every right to know what foreign vessels are doing in our waters, and we will not accept activities that threaten our security or disregard our sovereign rights," Goitia said.He cited the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (Unclos), particularly Article 246, which generally requires coastal state consent for marine scientific research in a country's exclusive economic zone and continental shelf, subject to the convention's provisions.Article 240 requires marine scientific research to be conducted exclusively for peaceful purposes.The latest developments add to tensions around Bajo de Masinloc, a longstanding flashpoint in the maritime dispute between the Philippines and China.The shoal lies about 124 nautical miles west of Zambales, within the Philippines' 200-nautical-mile exclusive economic zone.China has maintained control over access to the shoal since a 2012 standoff with the Philippines. In 2016, an arbitral tribunal ruled that Filipino fishermen had traditional fishing rights there and that China had unlawfully prevented them from exercising those rights.The tribunal also rejected China's claims to historic rights over resources within its so-called nine-dash line to the extent that they exceeded the maritime entitlements allowed under Unclos.Beijing rejects the ruling and continues to assert sovereignty over the shoal.

- Public-private partnerships pushed for more PH airports (2026-10-31 04:51)

MANILA, Philippines -- Transportation Secretary Vince Dizon said on Saturday that the government would pursue more public-private partnerships (PPPs) for airports nationwide, citing improvements in security, passenger comfort and queue management at facilities already turned over to private operators.Dizon said President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. had directed the Department of Transportation (DOTr) to pursue PPP arrangements for as many airports as possible, with announcements on additional projects expected in the coming days. “Clearly, we can see the difference in security, comfort and shorter queues,” Dizon said, comparing airports operated under PPP arrangements with those still managed by the government.He cited the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA), Clark International Airport and Mactan-Cebu International Airport as examples of airports under private-sector participation. “There's a huge difference when we compare these airports with those that have not yet been placed under PPP arrangements,” according to the DOTr chief.Acknowledging that improvements at the country's airports remained a work in progress, Dizon stressed that the private-sector participation would help accelerate upgrades and improve passenger services. “We still have a lot to improve, but things have gotten much better and travel has become more convenient. We can make these improvements faster and more efficiently through public-private partnerships because the government alone cannot do it,” he said.Dizon’s remarks came as the government prepared for the upcoming Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) Summit, which will bring regional leaders and delegates to the Philippines.The DOTr was still coordinating with the Asean Organizing Committee to determine the summit's impact on flight schedules, including possible cancellations and adjustments to the arrivals and departures of heads of state and other delegates, the top transportation agency official said.

- Lopez orders resumption of work on delayed road projects (2026-10-31 03:12)

MANILA, Philippines—Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) Secretary Giovanni Lopez has ordered regional and district engineering officials to continue delayed infrastructure projects, saying the agency will honor commitments under the previous leadership.Lopez, who personally led the reopening of a road in Tuba, Benguet on Friday, said the administration would ensure the completion of projects previously committed to by his predecessor and now Department of Transportation (DOTr) Secretary Vince Dizon, stressing that these were obligations to the public. “If you recall, Secretary Vince Dizon visited this site in May 2026 and instructed the regional director and district engineering officials to address the problem here,” Lopez said.The road had been operating one way since 2025, inconveniencing residents and motorists, he said.Lopez said the concerned local DPWH officials were directed to resolve the problem, with regional and district engineering personnel committing to complete the necessary work within five months. “We will hold them to their commitment,” Lopez said.He added that President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. had ordered the reopening of the road, so motorists and residents could use it during the Undas holiday period.The President had also directed the DPWH to complete urgent major road repairs by Oct. 30, 2026 to ease travel during the annual observance of All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day, Lopez said.Despite changes in leadership at DPWH and DOTr, Lopez said the administration would continue projects initiated under Dizon. “The President's instruction is that whatever commitments Secretary Vince made and whatever projects were delayed must be continued,” he said. “That commitment is not just to the President or to Secretary Vince. Above all, it is a commitment to the Filipino people,” Lopez added.He then instructed DPWH regional directors and district engineers to ensure that ongoing projects proceeded without further delays, saying there was no sufficient reason to allow the work to be held up any longer.The top DPWH official said he would continue monitoring infrastructure projects to ensure that commitments made by the government were fulfilled.

(SUCs) to participate in the commemoration led by the Climate Change Commission (CCC). “The 2026 Global Warming and Climate Change Consciousness Week will be celebrated nationwide from 19 to 25 November 2026, to be led by the Climate Change Commission (CCC) under the theme, "Komunidad, Kooperasyon at Koordinasyon para sa Klima," and its successful celebration will require the active participation of all concerned government agencies and instrumentalities, as well as the support of local government units (LGUs), educational institutions, civil society organizations, and the private sector,” the memorandum reads.

- LPA to bring rains to parts of PH on 'Undas' (2026-10-31 02:06)

MANILA, Philippines — A lowp ressure area (LPA) is expected to bring scattered rains and thunderstorms over parts of the Visayas, Mindanao, Mimaropa and Bicol Region on Saturday, according to the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa).In its live weather forecast, Pagasa weather earlier in the day, specialist Obet Badrina said the LPA was last spotted 320 kilometers east of Borongan City, Eastern Samar. “It may move westward and possibly pass through Eastern Visayas and parts of the Visayas,” Badrina said.Meanwhile, the shear line is expected to bring scattered rains over Cagayan, Isabela, Aurora and Quezon.Metro Manila, Central Luzon and the rest of Luzon may experience isolated rain showers and thunderstorms from afternoon to evening, according to the weather bureau.Badrina advised those visiting cemeteries for Undas to bring umbrellas.

- Senate to scrutinize P7.2T budget after businessmen raise alarm over House insertions — Gatchalian (2026-10-31 01:27)

MANILA, Philippines — Senate President Sherwin “Win” Gatchalian on Saturday assured the country’s business sector that the Senate would vet the proposed P7.2 trillion 2027 national budget, promising to strip away all politically driven, technically baseless congressional insertions.The statement comes in direct response to a joint manifesto issued by major business groups on Oct. 29, 2026, which raised concerns over P180 billion in realignments introduced by the House of Representatives under House Bill 10858. Gatchalian welcomed the private sector’s vigilance and maintained that a clean budget can be delivered without delaying its timely passage.Senate to purge document-deficient projectsReassuring investors and the public of the Senate's commitment to fiscal discipline, Gatchalian said that a formal recall of the House-approved General Appropriations Bill was unnecessary. Instead, the Senate will address the discrepancies through its own committee and plenary review processes."The Senate Committee on Finance will remove from the General Appropriations Bill all projects lacking supporting documents, such as feasibility studies, programs of work, resolutions from the LGUs, and other required documents," Gatchalian said.To ensure public oversight, the Senate leader also committed to deep transparency reforms. "We will continue the transparency reforms by uploading all relevant information to the Senate Transparency Portal," he added.Furthermore, Gatchalian asserted that the upper chamber will actively remove unconstitutional and lump-sum provisions previously flagged by the Supreme Court—specifically tightening safeguards on unprogrammed appropriations—while keeping final spending strictly within the president’s recommended ceiling in the National Expenditure Program (NEP).Business sector flag 'deeply troubling' realignmentThe business community’s joint call exposed a massive realignment by the House Budget Amendments and Review Subcommittee (BARSC), which added over P180 billion to the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) allocation. The adjustments reportedly inflated the DPWH project registry by 6,212 items—bringing the total to 16,270 projects—many of which are classified as vague lump sums for multi-purpose buildings and bypass roads lacking named proponents or published project lists.Of greater concern to the business sector was the source of the funding. The House reportedly carved out P130 billion from rigorously prepared, foreign-assisted infrastructure projects, P9.5 billion from calamity funds, P4.9 billion from vital healthcare programs, and P1.76 billion from the EDSA Busway project."Raiding calamity funds in a country that is exposed to disasters is indefensible," the business groups stated in its manifesto, warning that cutting foreign-assisted projects delays high-impact infrastructure needed to reduce logistics costs and attract capital. The sector noted that past unvetted insertions between 2023 and 2025 resulted in "ghost and substandard flood control projects" that wasted public funds.A growth budget, not an election fundIn response to fears that the allocations could be weaponized ahead of upcoming political cycles, Gatchalian firmly rejected the label of an "election budget." He emphasized that the final 2027 appropriations would be a growth and resilience budget explicitly mapped out to address inflation, job creation, food security, healthcare, and disaster readiness.

- Ombudsman suspends 5 Bulacan DPWH engineers over P188.9-M flood control projects (2026-10-30 18:21)

MANILA, Philippines — The Office of the Ombudsman on Friday has ordered the preventive suspension without pay of five Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) engineers in Bulacan over alleged falsification of documents involving three flood control projects worth P188.9 million in Baliuag.The five engineers — Irene D. Ontingco, Kevin A. Geronimo, John Michael E. Ramos, Bernardo P. Villafuerte and Michelle C. Cruz — will remain suspended for up to six months while administrative cases against them are being investigated.They face charges of grave misconduct, serious dishonesty and gross neglect of duty over the 2024 projects involving the construction of reinforced concrete slope revetments in Barangays Piel, San Roque and Sulivan.The Ombudsman’s investigation stemmed from allegations that the engineers falsified documents covering project implementation, inspection, acceptance, billing and payment to make it appear that contractual and legal requirements had been met. “To facilitate the implementation of the contracts and the disbursement of public funds, complainant maintains that respondents falsified documents relating to contract implementation, inspection, acceptance, billing and payment to create the false impression that the contractual and legal prerequisites had been satisfied,” the Ombudsman’s order read.Investigators also alleged that project documents were manipulated to facilitate the award of the contracts to a joint venture that supposedly failed to comply with applicable laws and regulations.The Ombudsman said the allegations were supported by strong evidence at this stage and that allowing the engineers to remain in office could jeopardize the investigation because they might access or tamper with relevant records.The three projects had a combined contract value of P188,891,898.23.Other respondents in the administrative complaint include former Bulacan First District engineering officials and personnel who have since left government service, been detained or retired. Their preventive suspension was deemed moot.Two Commission on Audit auditors named as co-respondents were not suspended because the Ombudsman found no indication that their continued presence in office could lead to evidence tampering or obstruct the investigation.The respondents also face separate criminal complaints before the Ombudsman.

- China boosts patrols around disputed shoal (2026-10-30 16:19)

CHINA’s military said on Friday its naval and air forces conducted combat readiness patrols around Bajo de Masinloc, also known as Scarborough Shoal, which has long been a flash point in tensions between Beijing and Manila in the South China Sea (SCS).The People’s Liberation Army Southern Theater Command, in a statement, said the patrols were “necessary countermeasures in response to the Philippines’ rights violation and provocative acts,” and it has strengthened such patrols this month.The Philippine Embassy in Beijing and the Philippine military did not immediately respond to a request for comment.Tensions between China and the Philippines resurfaced at the close of a two-day Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) defense gathering on Thursday, with Beijing accusing an unnamed Philippine politician of obstructing its participation in the event. Manila said China had been given an opportunity at the meeting to state its position.China claims sovereignty over almost the entire SCS via a nine-dash line on its maps that cuts into parts of the exclusive economic zones of Malaysia, Vietnam, the Philippines, Brunei and Indonesia. An international arbitral tribunal ruled in 2016 that China’s sweeping claims have no basis under international law, a decision Beijing rejects. “Such patrols are aimed at further enhancing control and management over relevant waters and airspace, and serve as an effective countermeasure to cope with all sorts of rights violation and provocative acts,” the Chinese military said.Separately, the China Coast Guard also conducted law-enforcement patrols in the waters around the shoal on Friday, calling the activities “necessary countermeasure in response to the Philippines’ rights violation and provocative acts.” Neither the Chinese military nor the China Coast Guard gave details on which Philippine actions they were referring to.Warning that the international community is approaching a geopolitical “precipice,” Philippine Foreign Affairs Secretary Ma. Theresa Lazaro defended the rule of law, declaring that maritime security in the Indo-Pacific has become an indivisible global responsibility.Speaking at the 17th Festival della Diplomazia in Rome on Oct. 26, Lazaro addressed European diplomats and academics on the theme “What’s Next? Running on the Edge.” Lazaro focused on the 10th anniversary of the 2016 arbitral award, saying that the ruling remains final and binding, and serves as a shield for smaller nations against superpowers. “The award demonstrates that even amid profound asymmetries of power, international law offers nations a peaceful means to defend their rights,” Lazaro said.Despite facing continued coercion and harassment in Philippine waters, Lazaro emphasized that Manila's diplomatic restraint should not be misinterpreted. "Restraint is not surrender. Dialogue is not acquiescence," she said. "The Philippines seeks no confrontation. Neither will we relinquish our lawful rights." She warned European leaders that ignoring violations in Asia undermines global security, stating that if international law is disregarded in the SCS, "its authority is weakened in the Mediterranean, the Adriatic and everywhere else." Turning to regional strategy, Lazaro outlined Manila's priorities for its 2026 Asean chairmanship under the theme "Navigating Our Future, Together." She said the regional bloc must move past mere anniversaries to secure concrete resolutions, particularly a legally binding Code of Conduct in the SCS that respects Unclos (United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea) and an inclusive solution to the ongoing crisis in Myanmar.

- Full hunt on for dela Rosa as surrender deadline ends (2026-10-30 16:18)

AN all-out police manhunt has been launched for Sen. Ronald dela Rosa after the deadline for his surrender lapsed on Friday.The Philippine National Police (PNP) has formed tracker teams in all regions to arrest the fugitive lawmaker, Lt. Gen. Wilson Lopez, chief of the PNP's Directorate for Intelligence, told in a press briefing at Camp Crame.Lopez also said the PNP's hotlines have been swamped with information on dela Rosa's supposed whereabouts since the government offered P50 million for his arrest. He said each piece of information will be evaluated.Lopez also said the PNP is still validating reports that dela Rosa is under the protection of a private armed group in Mindanao.He said the senator has never sent surrender feelers to the government.Lopez said the PNP's latest information is that dela Rosa is still in the country, debunking reports that he has escaped through the country's southern backdoor.Dela Rosa is the subject of an arrest warrant from the International Criminal Court (ICC) that alleges he is a co-perpetrator in the Duterte administration's controversial crackdown on drugs.Malacañang on Thursday said dela Rosa's world is "shrinking." Lopez agreed. "Alam niyo kapag may binigay na bounty na P50 million the possibility maraming tao ang pwedeng tumawag ang posibleng lokasyon (When a P50 million bounty is offered, there's a strong possibility that many people might call in with potential locations)," he said.In a related development, the ICC has transmitted applications involving 100 individuals seeking to participate as victims in the trial of former president Rodrigo Duterte.In separate documents dated Oct. 28, the ICC Registry transmitted 46 applications covering 96 applicants classified under Group A and four applications classified under Group C to Trial Chamber III, which is hearing the case against Duterte.The Group A applicants were assessed as clearly qualifying as victims under the court's procedures, while the four Group C applications involve applicants whose eligibility the Registry could not clearly determine.The transmissions were made pursuant to an oral instruction issued by the chamber during a status conference on May 27, 2026, and follow the ICC's A-B-C approach to processing applications for victim participation.The Registry's classification assesses the applicants' eligibility and does not, by itself, constitute a final judicial determination on every application.Under the A-B-C approach, Group A covers applicants who clearly qualify as victims, Group B those who clearly do not qualify and Group C those whose eligibility cannot be clearly determined.The system allows the court to distinguish applications that can be assessed more readily from those requiring further consideration.The Registry classified the annexes accompanying the 46 Group A applications as confidential and available only to the Registry.The four Group C applications were transmitted with annexes in a confidential version available only to the Registry and a confidential redacted version.The Registry said two of the four applications contained forms completed in Tagalog, with English translations.Because it lacked the capacity to apply word-for-word redactions to the Tagalog text in each application, the Registry redacted in full the portions completed in that language.The public documents did not identify the applicants or disclose details of the incidents underlying their applications.The Registry's assessment of the Group C applications leaves their eligibility for victim participation subject to further consideration under the court's procedures.The victims' participation in a trial is a feature of ICC proceedings that allows them to present their views and concerns through legal representatives.Victims who are allowed to participate are not automatically prosecution witnesses.Duterte faces charges of crimes against humanity in connection with killings linked to his administration's antidrug campaign and alleged killings in Davao during the period covered by the case. He denies the allegations.The ICC has scheduled the start of Duterte's trial for Nov. 30 in The Hague, the Netherlands, where he has been detained since his arrest in March 2025.On Friday, the Truth Commission investigating the killings during Duterte's war on drugs called on the Professional Regulation Commission (PRC) and the Philippine Medical Association (PMA) to look into the "mis-certification" by medical doctors of the death certificates of several drug war victims. "A death certificate is the official record of how a life ended. When it names the wrong cause, it can hide the violence and skew the country's death statistics. It can also block a family's search for the truth," the commission said in a statement.The victims' families provided death certificates issued by five doctors, citing that the victims died of illness.The commission said that the death certificates of at least 13 drug war cases cited either pneumonia or heart attack, despite forensic findings attributing their death to gunshot wounds.It said the "mis-certifications" could just be the tip of the iceberg. "These questionable certificates blame illness for at least 13 deaths but forensic findings in every one of these cases show the victims had been shot," the commission said.The commission is also asking the authorities "to correct the erroneous certificates so that families have an accurate record of how their relatives died." The panel has reviewed 13 cases from Caloocan City and Quezon City, which recorded 11 deaths in 2016 and two in 2018. "The death certificates list pneumonia as the cause of death in six cases and heart attack in four. Of the remaining three, one cites sepsis and another high blood pressure. The last records a stroke with bleeding, along with high blood pressure," the commission said.Forensic pathologist Dr. Raquel Fortun, who also serves in the commission, said there were gunshot wounds in every case. "Families deserve accurate death certificates, and the public deserves an honest account of how these men and women died," commission chairman Raul Pangalangan said.The doctors named by the commission included Caloocan Health Department medical officer Dr. Amadea Cruz, private physician Dr. Kathleen Timogan, Dr. Arnold Montero, Dr. Ramil Razon and Torres-Bugallon Health Center medical officer Dr. Leonilo Aquino.The commission said naming these doctors is a call for investigation and not a finding of guilt. "Given that these documents were produced during the 'drug war,' the commission is also cognizant of the possibility that the doctors may have been forced to fabricate information in the certificates, making them, in effect, victims of the 'drug war' themselves," it said.However, the commission said that the fact that they signed the questionable documents "warrants scrutiny and discipline based on due process." The commission called for the correcting of certificates by the Philippine Statistics Authority, the investigation of the doctors and the certification process by the PRC Board of Medicine and the PMA's ethics committee on who is responsible, and protecting the evidence and checking of other cases.The commission was established last May by civil society organizations and church groups.

- Govt mobilizes to ensure safe travel during Undas (2026-10-30 16:16)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. said on Friday government measures are in place to safeguard the safety of millions of Filipinos who will be traveling during the long All Saints' Day weekend.In a video message, Marcos said he has ordered the inspection of bus terminals and airports, as well as road repairs to ensure that the journey to the provinces or visiting cemeteries is "safe, orderly and comfortable." The president said the Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board (LTFRB) has issued over 1,000 special permits for provincial buses during Undas, or All Saints' Day, celebration, while maritime authorities have relaxed rules and additional sea schedules from Oct. 29 to Nov. 3.At international airports, immigration counters will maintain full staffing from Oct. 30 to Nov. 3, supplemented by e-gates to streamline passenger queues. Round-the-clock help desks will likewise operate across major terminals.Beyond transit hubs, security and health protocols have been tightened across public spaces, churches and columbaria, with local police and the Bureau of Fire Protection (BFP) placed on standby for rapid response. Hospital and health emergency teams are also on high alert.The president advised motorists to plan trips ahead, purchase tickets online to avoid long queues, and utilize official government hotlines and channels for emergency assistance.The LTFRB said it has set up more than 80 help desks at bus stations and other public land transport hubs for Undas.The help desks will provide not only basic information on travel schedules but also all necessary assistance, particularly for senior citizens and persons with disabilities, acting LTFRB Chairman Greg Pua Jr. said.The Department of the Interior and Local Government (DILG) said close to 283,000 barangay tanods, or village watchmen, in the country's 42,010 barangay (villages) and more than 111,000 police personnel will be deployed during All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day.The DILG said the watchmen would serve as force multipliers for the police in maintaining peace and order at cemeteries, columbariums and memorial parks.Senate President Sherwin Gatchalian has called on national law enforcement agencies to enforce strict safety and security protocols nationwide during the extended weekend.Gatchalian emphasized that a proactive, highly synchronized strategy between municipal executives and police units is critical to mitigating criminal activities, managing severe traffic gridlocks on major tollways, and ensuring crowd control at cemeteries and major transport hubs. "The commemoration of our departed loved ones will be more meaningful if everyone's journey is smooth and safe," he said.He also highlighted the importance of discipline, patience and road courtesy among motorists. “We already know that many people will be traveling during this period; let’s avoid getting hot-headed and remain respectful toward our fellow motorists,” he said.In response to the expected exodus of commuters to provincial destinations, Philippine National Police chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. announced that the police force has been placed on full alert.Over 72,000 police personnel will be deployed at critical arterial roads, terminal entry points and memorial sites, with reinforcements from the Armed Forces of the Philippines, BFP and the Philippine Coast Guard.The Parañaque Integrated Terminal Exchange estimates a heavy volume of 1.9 million passengers, mirroring peak numbers anticipated across maritime provincial ports during Undas.The Ninoy Aquino International Airport is also scaling up operations to accommodate approximately 1.2 million travelers.The environmental advocacy group EcoWaste Coalition appealed to the public to observe eco-friendly and zero waste practices during the All Saints’ Day weekend. “Every year, we see the aftermath of thousands flocking to cemeteries during Undas season — heaps of trash scattered along sidewalks, overflowing bins, food wrappers and containers left behind on tombstones — and every year, we continue to forward this campaign to reduce trash and make Undas completely waste-free,” Ochie Tolentino, EcoWaste’s Zero Waste campaigner, said in a statement.EcoWaste also held a candle-lighting ceremony as a way to enjoin everyone in respecting not just their departed loved ones, but also the environment. Each candle signified a solemn vow to “do away with ecologically harmful practices and promote a more waste-free All Saints’ Day and All Souls’ Day.”

- SSS streamlines cash aid for low-income members (2026-10-30 16:15)

QUALIFIED Social Security System (SSS) members can now get financial aid under the government’s Uplift (Unified Package for Livelihoods, Industry, Food and Transport) assistance program without filing an application form, accessing portal links, or waiting in long queues.Uplift, according to the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD), identifies and selects beneficiaries automatically, setting it apart from other government assistance schemes that require applicants to line up and submit paperwork.The SSS said that a member need only to meet all of the criteria like the monthly salary credit (MSC) that must be P20,000 or below, with expanded coverage focusing heavily on those earning an MSC of P10,000 or below.The cash assistance program will be given in four tranches of P2,000 each, to be credited directly to the member’s registered SSS disbursement account.The state pension fund said a member must have paid at least one SSS contribution in 2025 or 2026 and his or her name must appear in the Philippine Statistics Authority’s 2024 Community-Based Monitoring System database as part of a low-income or near-poor household.The assistance is limited to one beneficiary per household. If several SSS members live under one roof, only the oldest member qualifies.Once selected, a beneficiary need not lift a finger to claim the aid. There is no registration form, online portal link or walk-in application form to accomplish. The P8,000 is automatically credited directly to the member’s registered SSS disbursement account.The only requirement on the member’s end is ensuring that the receiving account — whether a bank account, e-wallet or Philippine Identification System (PhilSys) account — is properly enrolled through the SSS Disbursement Account Enrollment Module (DAEM).To confirm their eligibility on the program, members can verify their status through their My.SSS Portal in three steps: logging in to the portal, checking the inbox or official notifications for messages about Uplift eligibility and MSC bracket, and confirming that disbursement account details are active and updated under DAEM, if a notification arrived but no funds have posted yet.Since not everyone can receive funds digitally, the assistance can also be received through a manual payout route.Beneficiaries will wait for scheduled announcements from their local government unit or check the official DSWD Field Office social media accounts for their barangay's designated date and location.During manual payout schedules, government personnel and representatives from local financial service providers — such as LandBank, GCash or Maya — are typically stationed on-site.They can assist beneficiaries in registering their details into the official DSWD Uplift G2P Portal, ensuring that succeeding tranches can be claimed digitally and sparing them from having to fall in line again.For members who receive an official eligibility notification via email or My.SSS but have no access to electronic banking, an SSS branch with tellering facilities serves as a fallback.There, e-Center or help desk personnel can guide members through registration or coordinate with the DSWD for manual processing options.Those claiming through a manual on-site payout must bring two valid government-issued identification cards, specifically an SSS UMID (Unified Multi-Purpose ID) card and PhilSys National, along with photocopies and printed or screenshot copy of the notification.

- 'Star Trek,' 'X-Men' icon Patrick Stewart dies (2026-10-30 16:14)

PATRICK Stewart, the classically trained actor who added Shakespearean gravitas to the "Star Trek" and "X-Men" franchises, has died. He was 86.Stewart died on Wednesday in Los Angeles, following "a brief and poignant journey" with Alzheimer's disease and Lewy Body Dementia, spokesman Kelly Bush Novak said. Stewart's diagnoses had not been previously disclosed."We lost one of the greats of stage and screen today," Hugh Jackman, a frequent Stewart co-star in the "X-Men" universe, said on social media. "And, in my book, a tremendous friend and man. I learned so much from him. I will miss you, Patrick Stewart, all of my days."While best known as Professor Charles Xavier and Captain Jean-Luc Picard from the "X-Men" and "Star Trek: The Next Generation" series and films, respectively, Stewart spent more of his career onstage than in the X-Mansion or on the USS Enterprise.Besides playing everyone from Claudius to Macbeth, he often performed a one-man rendition of "A Christmas Carol" and did West End and Broadway runs of Harold Pinter's "No Man's Land," and Samuel Beckett's "Waiting for Godot" in repertory with buddy Ian McKellen."He wore his heart on his sleeve, which made him a man to rely on, to admire and in my case, love," McKellen posted on social media.He won three Olivier Awards, including one for playing Claudius in "Hamlet" opposite David Tennant. And he had a Grammy — in 1996 for best spoken word album for his recording of "Peter and the Wolf."He achieved some of the best reviews of his career when he finally tackled Macbeth for the first time. The production, under the direction of Rupert Goold, debuted in May 2007 at England's Chichester Festival Theater, switched to London's West End and then moved to the Brooklyn Academy of Music before transferring to Broadway in 2008.Stewart’s performance earned him his sole Tony Award nomination. The Times of London said his Macbeth was “an enthralling creation of frailty, appetite, egotism and grim humor.” The Daily Telegraph said he had turned in “a truly great performance,” and The New York Times said it was “a must-see.” “Nearly 50 years I’ve waited,” Stewart told the Associated Press in 2008. “I learned it when I was 14. I memorized all the soliloquies just because I thought they were great. And they stuck, so I didn’t have to learn those bits of the play, which is a blessing, because learning lines has now become the one curse of this job.”Raised in Mirfield in Yorkshire, a working-class corner of northern England, the future 24th-century commander of a starship grew up without a bathroom in his house.Stewart joined an amateur drama group at 12 and memorized Shakespeare for fun as a teen. He won a scholarship to the Bristol Old Vic Theater School, launching a career as a character actor.He had been bald since he was 19 — alopecia runs in his family.His father, a former regimental sergeant major in the British Army, was prone to outbursts of “repeated violence against my mother,” as Stewart wrote in a newspaper piece. “Violence is always a choice a man makes, and he alone is responsible for it.”In his memoir, “Making It So,” Stewart wrote about how he and his older brother Trevor braced for the nights when their dad came home drunk and angry, and attacked their mother. “Sometimes it was with an open hand, other times a closed fist. Always he aimed for her head.”The son would later become a patron for Refuge, an organization that provides shelter for domestic abuse victims.“The stage would prove to be a safe space, a refuge from real life in which I could inhabit another person, living in another place and time,” he would write.Stewart was accepted into the Royal Shakespeare Company and stayed for 14 years, playing everything from Mark Antony to Henry IV to Shylock to Oberon. “People who were not in the company would say to me, ‘Give it a break. Why don’t you go somewhere else?’ And I would say, ‘To do what?’” he told the Associated Press (AP). “Telly?”Stewart eventually left to look for more varied work, including the 1981 film “Excalibur.” He had just done a production of “Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?” in 1987 when an interesting offer came along. “I found myself in Hollywood shooting a syndicated science fiction series, which I was assured would fail.”It didn’t, of course. Thanks to Stewart’s rich baritone and noble bearing, the “Star Trek” franchise ran for seven years, 178 episodes and produced four feature films. He was known for his slogan “Make it so.”His adoration for Shakespeare would serve him well when he began to play Jean-Luc Picard, a 24th-century starship commander.“There is a formality to the way they speak and comport themselves that remind me of numerous Shakespearean situations I’d been in onstage. I should play Jean Luc, I realized, as if he were a character in ‘Henry IV,’ which is about brave men,” Stewart wrote in his memoir.Despite the Borg and Klingons, Stewart still managed to make room for blank verse. He established the Paramount Shakespeare Company, a workshop on Saturday and Sunday mornings for any actor interested. (Stewart revisited Picard in the TV series “Star Trek: Picard.”)Stewart died just a few days after Walter Koenig, another “Star Trek” icon, who played Ensign Pavel Chekov on the original NBC TV show from 1966 to 1969.“What a heartbreaking week it has been,” William Shatner, who played Captain James T. Kirk in the franchise, wrote on Instagram. “Sir Patrick Stewart was a friend, a colleague and a magnificent actor. From the stage to the bridge of the Enterprise, he brought intelligence, grace and a deep sense of humanity to everything he did.” “Star Trek: The Next Generation” gave him higher visibility, which led to more work, including roles in the films “Conspiracy Theory,” “L.A. Story” and on Broadway, where he starred in “The Tempest,” “The Caretaker” and David Mamet’s “A Life in the Theater.” He was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II in June 2010. Stewart was also an ambassador for the International Rescue Committee.In July 1992, he and supermodel Cindy Crawford were on the cover of TV Guide’s “Top Turn-Ons,” based on a readers’ poll. In his memoir, Stewart wrote: “Absurd.”Stewart was first introduced as the character Xavier in the original X-Men trilogy, appearing in three films from 2000 to 2006. He later returned in four more movies before Professor X’s death in 2017’s “Logan.” He reappeared in “Doctor Strange in the Multiverse of Madness” in 2022 and reprised the role in the upcoming “Avengers: Doomsday.”He also showed off his comedic chops aboard Seth MacFarlane’s Starz show “Blunt Talk” for two series and voiced Poop in “The Emoji Movie.” He made appearances on “Robot Chicken,” “Futurama” and “The Simpsons” (in one episode, Homer loses his hair, and Stewart tells him it’s great to be bald.) One of his last credits was with Jackman in 2026’s “The Sheep Detectives.”Later in life, he proved internet-savvy and found new fans with his humor, posing in a bath in a lobster suit and triggering memes when he posted a photo of him picking apples. When he was mistakenly outed as gay by a British newspaper, he said it was a nice change. “At least I didn’t wake up to the internet telling me I was dead again,” he tweeted.He married Brooklyn songwriter and singer Sunny Ozell in 2013, with the actor’s “X-Men” co-star McKellen officiating. Stewart later tweeted a photo of the newlyweds in a ball pit.He is also survived by two children, a daughter, Sophia, and a son, Daniel.The death of Patrick Stewart led to a slew of tributes, including from acting colleagues.British actor Ian McKellen paid tribute to his longtime friend Patrick Stewart, remembering their five-decade friendship and the bond they strengthened while playing rivals in the X-Men film franchise.In a tribute dated Oct. 29, McKellen recalled first meeting Stewart as ambitious young actors at the Royal Shakespeare Company in Stratford-upon-Avon about half a century ago, although they were not performing in the same productions. “My first strong memory was a few years later, meeting him in the street in central London,” McKellen wrote, recalling their encounter when Stewart told him about an offer to take over a leading role in Star Trek.McKellen said he had warned his friend about the possible consequences for his British stage career. “But Patrick, think of your stage career in the UK. Do you really want to risk — getting lost in Hollywood for years and years?” he recalled telling Stewart.Stewart nevertheless accepted the role of Captain Picard.Their friendship grew closer when they reunited for the first X-Men film, released in 2000. McKellen portrayed his ideological adversary, Erik Lehnsherr, better known as Magneto. “What a heartbreaking week it has been,” another Star Trek alum, William Shatner, said. “Sir Patrick Stewart was a friend, a colleague and a magnificent actor. From the stage to the bridge of the Enterprise, he brought intelligence, grace and a deep sense of humanity to everything he did. Captain Picard stood for the best of us, and so did the man who played him. I was filled with affection and admiration for him and his work.” “We lost one of the greats of stage and screen today. And, in my book, a tremendous friend and man. I learned so much from him. I will miss you, Patrick Stewart, all of my days.” Hugh Jackman, Stewart’s

“X-Men” co-star, posted on Instagram.George Takei, Stewart’s fellow “Star Trek” star, said on social media: “Fans across the world mourn the passing of a true and irreplaceable legend. As Captain Jean-Luc Picard, Patrick Stewart took the starship Enterprise to places it had never gone before. He inspired a whole next generation of star-gazers who looked longingly ahead to a brighter future for all humanity. Our hearts are heavy, indeed. Rest in the heavens, Captain.”

- Marcos: Pinoy food could lure tourists (2026-10-30 16:13)

CONFIDENT that Filipino cuisine can drive up tourism, President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. vowed to improve transport infrastructure to encourage travelers to explore the country’s rich gastronomy.During his speech at the Michelin Guide Restaurant Ceremony for Manila and Environs & Cebu 2027 on Thursday, Marcos highlighted how food — which he said is a “language everyone can appreciate” — can generate tourists and create value chains that empower domestic food producers. “Our country is known for our beautiful islands, our rich history and a vibrant culture. Now, our cuisine can become another reason for travelers to visit, explore our regions and to stay longer,” he said.Reflecting on the international recognition of local establishments — including Bib Gourmand honorees and Michelin-starred restaurants — Marcos noted that food offers a universal medium to share Filipino culture and values with the world. “When we launched the Guide last year, our goal was to promote gastronomy and tourism,” the president said. “We wanted to express who we are as a nation, as a people and as a culture in a language everyone can appreciate: food.” Marcos underscored how a higher demand for Filipino cuisines can help empower local food producers. Citing establishments like Gallery by Chele, which features Indigenous Cordillera rice varieties, Marcos stressed how global exposure benefits micro, small and medium enterprises (MSMEs). “Greater interest in Filipino cuisine can mean more opportunities for our farmers, our fisherfolk, food producers and our MSMEs,” he said.To sustain growth in culinary tourism beyond major urban hubs like Manila and Cebu, Marcos committed to improving transport infrastructure and expanding connectivity across the archipelago.He also pledged continued support for culinary education and skills development to help aspiring chefs and hospitality professionals compete on the global stage.

- Filipino injured in Spain train crash that killed 69 (2026-10-30 16:12)

A FILIPINO sustained minor injuries, and an entire family of Filipino tourists required emergency consular intervention in the high-speed train collision in Toledo, Spain, last Wednesday.At least 69 people were killed and 100 were injured in the incident.The Philippine Embassy in Madrid said the injured Filipino was immediately transported to a local hospital and is recovering. The Filipino’s identity or medical status were withheld by the embassy on the family’s request.Department of Foreign Affairs spokesman Analyn Ratonel separately announced that embassy personnel had located and provided immediate assistance to a family of Filipino tourists who were pulled out from the wreckage.As of Friday, no other Filipino casualties have been reported, and no further requests for assistance from nationals have been logged.According to Spain’s Ministry for Transport, a Renfe AVE train with 397 passengers rear-ended a stationary Iryo train with 146 passengers near the town of Urda, 150 kilometers south of Madrid.Initial findings from Spanish investigators reveal that a malfunction in the safety system forced the Iryo train to come to a complete stop due to a signal failure. Preliminary reports point to human error in the manual signaling backup operations, where the incoming Renfe train was erroneously authorized to proceed.Traveling at speeds approaching 200 kilometers per hour, the Renfe train struck the Iryo train, derailing four carriages and sending a mass of twisted metal down an embankment.The incident marks Europe's worst rail disaster this century and is the third deadly train crash in Spain in 2026 alone, fueling heavy political criticism ahead of Spain's snap elections scheduled for late November. Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez has declared three days of national mourning.The Madrid Embassy said it remains in close coordination with Castilla-La Mancha's civil protection services and rail operators.Filipino communities across Spain have been urged to account for their members and report anyone who might have been traveling on the Madrid-Andalusia line at the time of the crash.The embassy released contact numbers for relatives in the Philippines and Spain seeking information on missing loved ones:– Philippine Embassy 24/7 Hotline: +34 616 491 861– Renfe Family Assistance Helpline: +34 900 101 020– Consular Reporting Channel: Affected individuals or families can submit details directly via the embassy's Official Incident Registration Portal.

- Court rules men can be victims of sexual abuse (2026-10-30 16:10)

THE Supreme Court said that men can also be victims of sexual violence, and that the law renders justice to all victims of abuse regardless of gender.In an en banc decision penned by Senior Associate Justice Marvic Leonen, a woman was declared guilty of committing acts of lasciviousness against her 11-year-old nephew.Court records showed that the child, during a visit to his father's relatives, was asleep when the woman woke him up, ordered him to remove his clothes, and made him lie on her bed. She then engaged in sexual intercourse with him.Unable to understand the experience because of his young age, the boy secretly suffered from shame and later considered ending his life.He was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder resulting from the sexual abuse and was advised to undergo psychotherapy.The woman was found guilty of acts of lasciviousness in relation to Republic Act (RA) 7610 or the Special Protection of Children against Abuse, Exploitation and Discrimination Act by both the Regional Trial Court and the Court of Appeals.The woman had argued that the child had consented to the sexual act, but the high court disagreed.It said that at the time of the incident in 2018, the age of sexual consent was 12 years old. Because the child was only 11, he was deemed legally incapable of giving consent. The age of sexual consent has since been increased to under 16 years old following the enactment of RA 11648 in 2022.Leonen said that the proper offense is statutory acts of lasciviousness under Article 336 of the Revised Penal Code, not RA 7610.Citing jurisprudence, the Supreme Court said that RA 7610 applies when a minor appears to consent to sexual activity due to the coercion or influence of an adult. It does not apply when a minor is entirely unaware, unconscious, or unable to give legal consent, as in the case.The woman was charged with statutory acts of lasciviousness because, at the time of the offense, her acts did not fall within the legal definition of rape under Article 266-A of the RPC, the ruling said.The law then limited the act of rape to a man inserting his penis into a woman's vagina, as well as the insertion of a penis or any object into another person's genital, it said.However, the high tribunal said RA 11648, enacted in 2022, expanded the definition of rape, now stating that it may be committed by any person who has carnal knowledge of another person under the circumstances specified by law.The use of the term "person" in the law instead of specifying the perpetrator's gender allows for the commission of rape even by women, the high court said.Despite this amendment, the Court noted that some rulings continue to describe rape as a crime committed by men against women. It traced this view to older, patriarchal rape laws that were originally designed not to protect women from violence, but to punish men for taking women — who were considered the property of their fathers or husbands — through rape."These beliefs about rape are not only sexist, but also exclude male victims who suffer the same trauma. The failure to recognize that they can be victims of rape can also make it harder for them to realize that they were violated," Leonen said."Thus, while there must be recognition of the historical injustice women have suffered, the law, as well as its interpretation, must be resilient enough to provide equal protection to all victims and guard against stereotypes that all women are victims and all men are perpetrators. When laws are not gender-neutral, male victims suffer twice: once at the hands of their abuser and second through the judicial system," he added.The Court said that the sexual violence suffered by the child caused him intense shame and guilt and left him traumatized. The woman also made him believe that he had agreed to and enjoyed what was done to him.If the genders had been reversed, the incident would have been considered rape. However, as it stands, the acts penalized do not fall within the legal definition of rape as provided by law at the time of the crime, it said.As a result, the woman was sentenced to prison for nine to 16 years and ordered to pay damages.

- Duterte camp: New NBI witness 'planted' (2026-10-30 16:09)

VICE President Sara Duterte's spokesman Salvador Paolo Panelo Jr. said Friday that alias "Chris," an alleged former driver of ex-House speaker Lord Allan Velasco who claimed to have helped deliver suitcases of grease money for the vice president, is another planted witness."Another day, another planted witness. They can keep manufacturing allegations, but they cannot fabricate the truth," Panelo said in a statement.Panelo said Duterte would dismantle the allegations with evidence "at the proper time," challenging media organizations to go beyond reporting the claims."We invite the media not merely to report, but to independently test and verify these claims," he said, accusing unnamed parties of weaponizing the media for "relentless, but ultimately ineffective, black propaganda" against Duterte.The new witness appeared before the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) on Thursday and submitted a three-page sworn affidavit detailing his alleged involvement in deliveries of suitcases of grease money to Davao City in 2021 and 2022.He claimed to have worked for Velasco from 2020 to 2022, noting he was among those instructed to transport the suitcases of cash. He identified Velasco's head driver, Victor Sioco, as the person who allegedly told him the suitcases contained a "small gift" for Duterte.He, however, admitted not really knowing the contents of the suitcases, and not personally witnessing Duterte receiving them.He presented photographs of vehicles and screenshots of his social media posts, including one bearing the words “OTW DAVAO,” to support his account.

• Tiangco bares P2.28B budget, wants disclosures (2026-10-30 16:08)

NAVOTAS Rep. Toby Tiangco on Thursday made public P2.282 billion worth of proposed infrastructure projects for his district, challenging fellow lawmakers to disclose their own allocations after the House of Representatives rejected proposals to make budget transparency mandatory.“If they do not want to make transparency mandatory, I will start with my own district. There is no reason to hide from the public where their money goes,” Tiangco said in a Facebook Live broadcast.The lawmaker said he would publish the projects and their corresponding allocations on his official Facebook page so Navotas residents could scrutinize how the proposed funds would be spent.His disclosure follows the House’s rejection of two amendments he introduced on Oct. 7 seeking mandatory publication of the chamber’s budget utilization, including allocations and expenditures for each legislator, and DPWH projects in every congressional district.The P2.282 billion covers 39 proposed infrastructure projects for Navotas under the House version of the 2027 General Appropriations Bill, according to Tiangco.He said 75 projects worth P4.537 billion were approved by the Regional Development Council and civil society organizations for the city, but only 28 projects amounting to P1.609 billion were included in the National Expenditure Program.After consultations with DPWH officials and the Navotas City Engineering Office, 18 urgent projects worth P804.75 million were for prioritization, and 11 for deferment.Four additional DPWH-proposed projects worth P673 million brought the district’s proposed allocation to P2.282 billion.Tiangco urged his colleagues to adopt the same practice, saying constituents should know not only how much money is allocated to their districts but also which projects would receive funding and why they were selected.“If we can show the people of Navotas how much the budget is, where it will be spent, and why these projects were chosen, I hope all congressmen will do the same. Every Filipino has the right to know how their money is being spent,” he said.“Transparency cannot apply only when we are talking about the budgets of other agencies. It must start with us in Congress. The budget belongs to the people, not politicians,” he added.He said transparency should become a standard across government rather than depend on individual lawmakers’ willingness to disclose their allocations.“Transparency should not be optional. It should be the standard for everyone in government. And that standard must begin with us,” Tiangco said.

• Marcos: NLEx C5 Northlink 1A toll-free until yearend (2026-10-30 16:07)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. announced that the newly opened NLEx (North Luzon Expressway) C5 Northlink Segment 8.2 Section 1A, which connects Quezon City and Valenzuela City, would be toll-free until the end of 2026.Department of Transportation (DOTr) Secretary Vince Dizon, who joined the president along with Public Works and Highways Secretary Giovanni Lopez during the opening to motorists, said on Friday that the two-kilometer elevated expressway links the NLEx Mindanao Avenue toll plaza to Quirino Highway, spanning Barangay

Talipapa in Quezon City and Barangay Ugong in Valenzuela City.Dizon said the president is thankful for the support of the project proponent and concessionaire, NLEX Corp., for not collecting toll fees right away. “As with other newly opened roads, they are extending this accommodation while they still can — so passage here remains free until the end of the year,” the chief executive said in Filipino.Open to all vehicle classes, the newly opened road section has an estimated capacity of 11,000 vehicles per day, and the usual travel time of about 40 minutes would be cut down to roughly five minutes, according to DOTr.It said Section 1A is only a portion of the broader 11.3-kilometer Segment 8.2 project, designed to eventually connect Mindanao Avenue to C.P. Garcia Avenue (C-5) near Katipunan, also in Quezon City.Brothers Valenzuela Mayor Wes Gatchalian and District 1 Rep. Kenneth Gatchalian, who were with the president and Dizon along with NLEX Corp. executives, hailed the opening of the road section, which would benefit their constituents and largely contribute to the economic development of the two neighboring cities.

- Gasoline prices to spike, diesel to fall next week (2026-10-30 16:06)

GASOLINE prices are expected to increase next week, while diesel prices are expected to roll back, due to recent developments in the Middle East and oil-related regional events, local oil industry sources said on Friday.They said gasoline prices are estimated to spike by about P2.90 and P3.20 per liter, while diesel prices are expected to slip by about P0.40 and P0.60 per liter.The prices do not yet include freight-related costs, as sources said they are still unavailable.The price estimates are based on the four-day trading of Mean of Platts Singapore, the pricing basis of refined goods in Southeast Asia. “Diesel and gasoline prices closely followed the movement of crude oil this week, as they remained elevated amid concerns about energy supply disruptions in the Middle East due to continuing regional attacks and worries that the US could strike Iran after next week’s US midterm elections. “However, prices stopped increasing further due to a possible breakthrough in diplomatic efforts to end the eight-month-long conflict,” a source said. “Furthermore, other improving fuel supply prospects helped diesel and gasoline increases from going up further after China issued a fourth batch of fuel export quotas for gasoline, diesel and jet fuel. Other factors included South Korea easing its diesel export restrictions, and Ukrainian refinery strikes temporarily stopping,” the source added.This week, based on available price adjustment bulletins, gasoline prices slightly decreased by P0.30 per liter, while diesel prices went up by P1.20 per liter.

- Nov 5 hearing set for ex-BARMM exec, says PDEA (2026-10-30 16:05)

AFTER ignoring his initial subpoena, former Bangsamoro Transition Authority parliament member Edrieza Nasser Rimbang, accused of being the financier of the multibillion botched Laos drug shipment, is set to appear for an investigation before the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) on Nov. 5.PDEA spokesman Joseph Frederick Calulut confirmed that three of Rimbang’s lawyers visited the PDEA office on Oct. 27 to attest that their client will show up on Nov. 5 to submit his sworn statement.Rimbang’s team came to the PDEA office after the subpoena was sent to the ex-Bangsamoro official for allegedly financing the chartered 986 Learjet 55B that attempted to transport the 521-kilo shabu shipment to the Philippines but was intercepted by Laos authorities at Luang Prabang International Airport on Oct. 1. “Based on the evidence on hand, he appears to be the mastermind, not just a financier. We are waiting for him to give his statement so his defense isn’t just on social media. It’s better if it is in an affidavit,” Calulut told reporters in a phone interview on Thursday.A Filipino national identified as Fahad Mulok Dibarosan was arrested during the foiled smuggling attempt.Calulut noted that two other persons of interest (POIs) linked to the case have yet to appear before the PDEA.Depending on Rimbang’s affidavit, Calulut said more POIs will be identified “as the case progresses.” “Wala naman palugit, but we have a date doon sa mga subpoena na pina-receive natin sa kanila. So, na sa kanila ‘yan kung lulutang sila, pero mas maganda humarap na lang sila since POIs naman sila (There’s no extra grace period, but we have a set date on the subpoenas we had them receive. So it’s up to them if they’ll show up, but it’s better if they just face it since they’re POIs anyway),” he said. “Kapag sinabing POI, hindi naman agad-agad ay suspect eh. It could be possible na ikaw ay isang witness din (When we say POI, they are not automatically treated as suspects),” said Calulut.Calulut emphasized that PDEA holds documentary evidence proving Rimbang bankrolled the operation. “We have documents, we have evidence na nagsasabi si Rimbang ang nagbigay ng pera,” he said.Calulut stated that the PDEA is keenly verifying the possible involvement of Rimbang in previous illegal drug transactions. “Well, looking at his history, kung taga-saan ba si Rimbang, doon sa lugar na matagal nang known na maraming drug personalities, so hindi naman, dahil sinasabi niya na wala siyang kinalaman (sa illegal drugs), wala raw siyang kinita, ay we are going to believe it as gospel truth. So marami tayong tinitsek na mga anggulo pa (Well, looking at his history and considering where Rimbang hails from, a place known to have numerous drug personalities, we are not going to believe it as gospel truth just because he claimed his innocence and not earning from the drug deals. So we are still checking a lot of angles),” Calulut said.He also rejected Rimbang’s claims of absolute innocence, noting the suspect’s background in an area known for drug personalities. “Just because he says he has no involvement doesn’t mean we are going to believe it as the gospel truth. We are checking many other angles,” Calulut added.Rimbang is among three POIs who have yet to face PDEA, which includes a consignee, identified as Abdulkarim Macalatas, and other unnamed individuals.Interior and Local Government Secretary Jonvic Remulla identified 11 persons of interest in the case, including former Bangsamoro Transition Authority parliament member Edriezan Hadji Nasser Rimbang, whom he identified as the alleged financier of the operation.The PDEA is also coordinating with foreign counterparts and awaiting additional documents and information from Malaysia in connection with the investigation.The PDEA is also awaiting information from Laotian authorities regarding Fahad.

- CHEd to review nonpayment allegation (2026-10-30 16:03)

THE Commission on Higher Education (CHEd) said it would review a claim by Amianan PH that the agency had not paid for souvenir items it ordered for Asean-related activities.Amianan PH alleged that CHEd, as well as the Department of Energy (DOE), had not released payment nor made a down payment for products it ordered."CHED hasn't paid in 9 months, and DOE is about to pass the 1-month mark. How could you let this happen?" Amianan PH said in Filipino and English in a Facebook post on Thursday."We support so many communities; what is going to happen to them this Christmas? We cannot move forward when our money is just sleeping in your hands," it added.CHEd said the allegation was about a small-value procurement handled by its Regional Office 4. “As this involves a small-value procurement undertaken at the regional level, the transaction does not ordinarily pass through the Office of the Chairperson,” CHEd said in a statement on Friday.It added that the Office of the Chairperson would gather information from the concerned regional office and review the circumstances surrounding the matter. “Nevertheless, the Office of the Chairperson will personally ensure that the necessary information is gathered from CHEDRO IV, the circumstances are properly reviewed, and any issues identified are promptly and appropriately addressed,” CHEd said, noting the concern would be handled with transparency and accountability.

- CFO aims for more overseas aid for grassroots communities (2026-10-30 16:02)

THE Commission on Filipinos Overseas (CFO) has signed a memorandum of understanding with Angat Pinas Inc., a nonprofit organization widely known as Angat Buhay, to boost philanthropic endeavors of the global Filipino diaspora in the Philippines.CFO Secretary Dante Ang II and Angat Buhay Executive Director Raphael Martin Magno formalized the agreement.Through the partnership, the CFO will utilize its long-standing Lingkod sa Kapwa Pilipino (Linkapil) Program to channel financial resources, networks, and technical expertise from nonresident Filipinos (NRFs) and overseas organizations directly into Angat Buhay's targeted grassroots interventions. The collaborative framework will prioritize critical development areas, including public education, food security, public health, disaster risk reduction, housing, and climate resilience. “The continuing engagement of our NRFs can help translate migration experience into concrete opportunities for families, communities, and local development,” Ang said, emphasizing that the initiative aligns with the national policy of treating overseas Filipinos as indispensable partners in nation-building.Established in 1989, the CFO's Linkapil program has long served as a structural mechanism to funnel overseas assistance into local high-impact projects. Under the new agreement, the CFO will actively promote Angat Buhay's core anti-poverty initiatives to overseas networks and endorse community project proposals for direct diaspora funding.The partnership aims to engage second- and third-generation overseas Filipino youth in local civic action and volunteerism through CFO's Youth Leaders in the Diaspora program.By creating an institutional bridge between global donors and local communities, both entities aim to institutionalize the traditional spirit of bayanihan (volunteerism) for long-term development gains.

- Fil-American faces 20 years in CNMI fraud, bribery case (2026-10-30 16:01)

SAIPAN, Northern Mariana Islands — A Filipino-American former government official in the US Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands has pleaded guilty to federal theft and bribery charges in a multimillion-dollar fraud scheme that could land her in prison for up to 20 years.The case against Maribel Loste, former director of the Child Care and Development Fund, is connected to a separate federal fraud case involving Filipino mother and daughter Clarissa Adlawan and Giselle Butalid, who were sentenced earlier this year for defrauding the CNMI Public School System.Loste's lawyer, Robert Torres, confirmed the connection in an interview on Thursday. “Yes, there's a tie-in to that, and the plea speaks to that,” Torres said.Torres also confirmed that Loste had accepted responsibility for her criminal conduct and was scheduled for sentencing on Jan. 8, 2027, before US District Court Chief Judge Ramona Manglona. “She took responsibility for this case, for her conduct, and therefore pled guilty,” he said.Under a plea agreement filed June 25 in the US District Court for the Northern Mariana Islands and unsealed Thursday, Loste agreed to plead guilty to aiding and abetting theft concerning a program receiving federal funds and bribery concerning a program receiving federal funds.Each felony carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine, for a combined statutory maximum of 20 years and $500,000 in fines.Loste also agreed to forfeit at least $105,000 obtained through the bribery scheme, with the final amount to be determined at sentencing.According to the plea agreement, Loste used her authority as CCDF director under the Department of Community and Cultural Affairs to approve contracts involving Evergreen Learning Inc. and Dice LLC despite knowing their proposals contained false information, including grossly inflated costs.The scheme began around July 2021 and involved two unnamed individuals living in Kenmore, Washington. One was Loste's longtime friend who co-owned Evergreen and Dice and operated Language and Literacy Education and Professional Services, or Leaps, in Washington state.Both individuals were identified as unindicted co-conspirators.Federal prosecutors and Loste stipulated that the reasonably foreseeable financial loss from the theft offense exceeded $3.5 million but was less than $9.5 million.The bribery charge involved One Legacy LLC, which received approximately $1.41 million in CCDF contract payments between 2022 and 2024.Loste admitted accepting payments from an unnamed co-owner of One Legacy in exchange for approving and processing the company's contracts.One Legacy was also used by Adlawan and Butalid in a separate procurement fraud and money laundering scheme involving PSS.Adlawan, a US permanent resident originally from the Philippines, and Butalid, a naturalized US citizen also originally from the Philippines, were sentenced on May 6, 2026, to 48 months and 18 months in federal prison, respectively.According to the US Department of Justice, the women used One Legacy to conceal conflicts of interest and obtain payments for educational materials that PSS never ordered.They were ordered jointly to pay $548,788 in restitution, while two properties they owned in the Philippines were ordered forfeited.Federal prosecutors said some of the money obtained through the fraud was used to construct a nine-room house in the Philippines. The women also traveled to the country, stayed in luxury hotels and withdrew substantial amounts of cash.Loste's plea agreement does not identify Butalid or Adlawan by name or establish that they participated in her charged offenses.Loste had served as CCDF director since 2008, according to her professional background. Before that, she worked as an infant and toddler education specialist at the CNMI Public School System from 2006 to 2008.She holds a Master of Arts in Education, specializing in early childhood education and teaching, from California State University, Sacramento.Torres said Loste's guilty plea reflected her willingness to accept responsibility rather than proceed to trial. “It's not about remorse, it's about accountability and accepting responsibility when you've done wrong,” he said.He said Loste's sentence would depend on several factors, including the seriousness of the offenses, her personal background, deterrence and appropriate punishment.The US Probation Office will prepare a presentence investigation report, while the amount of restitution Loste may be required to pay remains undetermined.Federal prosecutors have agreed to recommend a sentence at the low end of the applicable sentencing guidelines, but the final decision rests with Manglona.

• Red cross deploys 1,890 personnel, volunteers for Undas (2026-10-30 15:20)

MANILA, Philippines — The Philippine Red Cross (PRC) is deploying 1,890 staff and trained volunteers nationwide from Oct. 30 to Nov. 3 to provide emergency assistance to travelers during Undas 2026.The PRC said its 102 chapters have established 322 first aid stations in high-density areas across the country, supported by 69 ambulances and 19 emergency response vehicles.The deployment includes 89 combined first aid and ambulance stations, 233 first aid stations, 158 welfare desks, 107 mobile units and 107 on-foot patrol teams.PRC responders will cover 247 cemeteries, eight seaports, eight highway and gas station posts, seven bus terminals, two airports and other public transit areas and chapter bases.PRC Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Richard J. Gordon urged travelers to prepare for their trips and consider the agency’s SafeCard program, which provides access to emergency ambulance services and blood supply support in case of road accidents, as well as financial coverage for accidental death, disablement and medical reimbursement during travel. “Undas is a sacred time for Filipino families to gather and remember their loved ones. While our emergency teams and ambulances are on the ground nationwide, true safety begins with preparation,” Gordon said in a statement on Friday.

• Dizon loses cool over 2-year CCTV handover delay at NAIA inspection (2026-10-30 11:43)

MANILA, Philippines — Transportation Secretary Vince Dizon on Friday lost his temper during a surprise inspection at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) Terminal 1 amid mounting controversies over unmaintained security systems and high-profile passenger thefts.Dizon could not hide his frustration after learning that the transfer of NAIA's closed-circuit television (CCTV) operations from the Manila International Airport Authority (MIAA) to the New NAIA Infra Corp. (NNIC) has been stalled for nearly two years.He recalled issuing the order more than a year and half ago before he was moved to the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) but the transfer was not completed.As a result, Dizon gave the MIAA until November to turn over control of the CCTV system to NNIC as he warned that those responsible for further delays would be dismissed.He expressed frustration over the delay and the finger-pointing among officials instead of taking responsibility for the failure of the CCTV system to clearly capture theft incidents. “I would be happier, and our countrymen would be happier, if you took responsibility instead of asking me who else you could point to," Dizon said. "That is why we are in government — to take responsibility," he added.Dizon warned that he would dismiss the officials concerned "if they stil haven't transferred it by then."Dizon also directed the NNIC to install more CCTV cameras at the airport to improve surveillance and deter theft.He cited an incident in which a CCTV camera was positioned too far from the area to clearly capture what happened.Dizon said airports in other countries have cameras installed at nearly every corner, making it more difficult for criminals to operate undetected.CCTV cameras serve not only as tools for law enforcement but also as a deterrent to crime, he said.Dizon's inspection came on the heels of a heated Senate Committee on Public Services hearing led by Senator Raffy Tulfo.Lawmakers called out airport officials after French national Anthony Claude Boukhors lost P18 million worth of luxury watches to a thief at the Terminal 1 Grab pick-up area.When authorities moved to track the suspect, they found that the entire pick-up zone had 'zero camera' coverage due to broken or missing units—prompting Tulfo to give airport officials 48 hours to fix the system.The systemic failure of the CCTV infrastructure compounds a string of embarrassing thefts at NAIA checkpoints.In September 2023, an Office for Transportation Security (OTS) personnel was caught attempting to pocket and physically swallow $300 in cash stolen from a Chinese passenger.There was also an incident wherein security screening officers were caught on camera stealing a luxury watch from a Chinese and extorting yen from a Thai tourist.Dizon publicly apologized to the victims of these high-value terminal thefts and pushed for systemic reforms, including the immediate handover of backend technology and the elimination of "blind spots"t o protect travelers passing through the country's main gateway.

- SC: Men can also be victims of sexual violence (2026-10-30 05:01)

MANILA, Philippines — Men can also be victims of sexual violence, stressing that the law must protect all victims of abuse regardless of gender, the Supreme Court ruled.In an en banc decision penned by Senior Associate Justice Marvic Leonen, the high tribunal found a woman guilty of committing acts of lasciviousness against her 11-year-old nephew.Court records indicated that the child, who visited his father's relatives, was asleep when the woman woke him up, ordered him to remove his clothes, and made him lie on her bed. She then engaged in sexual intercourse with him.Curious about what was happening, the child did not protest at first but after the incident, he felt ashamed and considered ending his life.The child was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder resulting from the sexual abuse as indicated by a psychological debriefing and supportive psychotherapy, the high tribunal said.The woman, same records showed, was found guilty of acts of lasciviousness in relation to Republic Act 7610 or the Special Protection of Children against Abuse, Exploitation and Discrimination Act by both the Regional Trial Court and the Court of Appeals.The woman had argued that the child had consented to the sexual act but the high court disagreed.It explained that at the time of the incident in 2018, the age of sexual consent was 12 years old. Because the child was only 11, he was deemed legally incapable of giving consent. (This has since been increased to under 16 years old following the enactment of RA 11648 in 2022.)Leonen in the same ruling clarified, however, that the proper offense was statutory acts of lasciviousness under Article 336 of the Revised Penal Code (RPC), not RA 7610.Citing a jurisprudence, the Court explained that RA 7610 applies when a minor appears to consent to sexual activity due to the coercion or influence of an adult. It does not apply when a minor is entirely unaware, unconscious, or unable to give legal consent, as in this case.The woman was charged with statutory acts of lasciviousness because, at the time of the offense, her acts did not fall within the legal definition of rape under Article 266-A of the RPC, the ruling said.The law then limited the act of rape to a man inserting his penis into a woman's vagina, as well as the insertion of a penis or any object into another person's genital, it stressed.However, the high tribunal said RA 11648, enacted in 2022, expanded the definition of rape, now stating that it may be committed by any person who has carnal knowledge of another person under the circumstances specified by law.The use of the term "person" in the law instead of specifying the perpetrator's gender allows for the commission of rape even by women, the high court said.Despite this amendment, the Court noted that some rulings continue to describe rape as a crime committed by men against women. It traced this view to older, patriarchal rape laws that were originally designed not to protect women from violence, but to punish men for taking women—who were considered the property of their fathers or husbands—through rape. “These beliefs about rape are not only sexist, but also exclude male victims who suffer the same trauma. The failure to recognize that they can be victims of rape can also make it harder for them to realize that they were violated,” Leonen said."Thus, while there must be recognition of the historical injustice women have suffered, the law, as well as its interpretation, must be resilient enough to provide equal protection to all victims and guard against stereotypes that all women are victims and all men are perpetrators. When laws are not gender-neutral, male victims suffer twice: once at the hands of their abuser and second through the judicial system," he added.The Court reiterated that the sexual violence suffered by the child caused him intense shame and guilt and left him traumatized. The woman also made him believe that he had agreed to and enjoyed what was done to him.If the genders had been reversed, the incident would have been considered rape. However, as it stands, the acts penalized do not fall within the legal definition of rape as provided by law at the time of the crime, it explained.As a result, the woman was sentenced to prison for nine to 16 years and ordered to pay damages.

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court (ICC) has transmitted 46 applications covering 96 applicants assessed as qualifying victims, along with four other applications whose eligibility remains unclear, for consideration in the trial of former president Rodrigo Duterte.In separate documents dated Oct. 28, 2026, the ICC Registry transmitted the 46 applications classified under Group A and four applications classified under Group C to Trial Chamber III, which is hearing the case against Duterte.The Group A applicants were assessed as clearly qualifying as victims under the court's procedures, while the Group C applicants are those whose eligibility could not be clearly determined by the Registry.The transmissions followed an oral instruction issued by the chamber during a status conference on May 27, 2026, and were made under the ICC's A-B-C classification system for victim participation.Under the system, Group A covers applicants who clearly qualify as victims, Group B those who clearly do not qualify, and Group C those for whom the Registry could not make a clear determination.The Registry said the annexes accompanying the 46 Group A applications were classified as confidential and available only to the Registry.For the four Group C applications, the Registry said two contained forms completed in Tagalog, together with English translations. Because it lacked the capacity to apply word-for-word redactions to the Tagalog text, it redacted in full the portions completed in that language.The documents did not identify the applicants or provide details of the incidents underlying their applications.The transmission of the applications does not, by itself, establish the final participation status of the applicants in the proceedings.

A system failure at 200 kph The tragedy unfolded at approximately 8:54 a.m. CET along the busy Madrid–Seville high-speed rail line. According to Spain’s Ministry for Transport, a Renfe AVE train carrying 397 passengers rear-ended a stationary Iryo train carrying 146 passengers near the town of Urda, located 150 kilometers south of Madrid. Initial findings from Spanish investigators reveal that a malfunction in the LZB train safety system forced the Iryo train to come to a complete standstill due to a signal failure. Preliminary reports point to human error in the manual signaling backup operations, where the incoming Renfe express was erroneously authorized to proceed. Traveling at speeds approaching 200 kilometers per hour, the Renfe unit struck the stopped train, violently derailing four carriages and sending a mass of twisted metal down an embankment. The incident marks Europe’s worst rail disaster this century and is the third deadly train crash in Spain in 2026 alone, fueling heavy political criticism ahead of Spain's snap elections scheduled for late November. Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez has since declared three days of national mourning. Consular Advisory and Crisis Hotlines The Philippine Embassy in Madrid stated that it remained in tight coordination with Castilla-La Mancha's civil protection services and rail operators. - PH says maritime security a global responsibility, pushes Code of Conduct in South China Sea (2026-10-30 00:40)

MANILA, Philippines — Foreign Affairs Secretary Ma. Theresa P. Lazaro said that maritime security in the Indo-Pacific has become an indivisible global responsibility. Speaking to European diplomats and the academe at the 17th Festival della Diplomazia on Oct. 26, 2026, Lazaro focused on the 10th anniversary of the 2016 South China Sea Arbitral Award, which nullified Beijing’s expansive maritime claims under the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea (Unclos). She affirmed that the legal victory remained final and binding, serving as a shield for smaller nations against superpowers."The Award demonstrates that even amid profound asymmetries of power, international law offers nations a peaceful means to defend their rights," Lazaro said in her speech on the theme “What’s Next? Running on the Edge.” Despite facing continued coercion and harassment in Philippine waters, Lazaro emphasized that Manila's diplomatic restraint should not be misinterpreted."Restraint is not surrender. Dialogue is not acquiescence," she told the assembly. "The Philippines seeks no confrontation. Neither will we relinquish our lawful rights." She warned European leaders that ignoring violations in Asia undermines global security, stating that if international law is disregarded in the South China Sea, "its authority is weakened in the Mediterranean, the Adriatic, and everywhere else." Turning to regional strategy, Lazaro outlined Manila's priorities for its 2026 Asean Chairmanship under the theme “Navigating Our Future, Together.” She noted that Asean must move past mere anniversaries to secure concrete resolutions, particularly a legally binding Code of Conduct in the South China Sea that respects Unclos, and an inclusive solution to the ongoing crisis in Myanmar.
