Security Analysis Report: Hong Kong (March 05, 2026 - March 12, 2026)

Executive Summary

During the period of March 05 to March 12, 2026, Hong Kong's security landscape was primarily shaped by its deepening integration with mainland China's strategic directives and an intensified focus on internal security. Beijing reiterated its expectation for Hong Kong to align with the national 15th Five-Year Plan and enhance governance efficacy. Cybersecurity remained a critical concern, with warnings about AI-driven attacks following a record number of incidents in 2025. Concurrently, the People's Liberation Army (PLA) Hong Kong Garrison conducted routine military exercises, underscoring the city's defense posture. The ongoing implementation and extraterritorial implications of the Safeguarding National Security Ordinance (Article 23) continued to draw international attention, while Hong Kong also sought to influence global counter-terrorism definitions at the United Nations.

Key Security Developments

- Military Activities and Exercises

The PLA Hong Kong Garrison conducted scheduled firing practices at the San Wai/Tai Ling Firing Range and the Tsing Shan Firing Range throughout March 2026. The public was advised to avoid these areas for safety. These exercises are part of the garrison's annual training regimen, which commenced on January 4, 2026, with the stated aim of enhancing combat capabilities and strengthening defense responsibilities in Hong Kong.

- Defense Policy and Strategic Shifts

China's 15th Five-Year Plan (2026-2030), unveiled on March 5, 2026, at the National People's Congress in Beijing, explicitly emphasized Hong Kong's need to better integrate into national development and improve its governance efficacy. In response, Hong Kong Chief Executive John Lee pledged on March 5, 2026, to formulate the city's first "broad, strategic and forward-looking" five-year plan, to be completed within the year, aligning with the national blueprint.

- Diplomatic Relations

During the "Two Sessions" in Beijing, Premier Li Qiang and other senior Chinese officials, including Vice-Premier Ding Xuexiang and Director Xia Baolong, stressed the central government's expectation for Hong Kong to improve its governance and efficiency. On March 10, 2026, Hong Kong delegate Conrad Ho Pui-lam urged the United Nations Human Rights Council to refine the definition of terrorism to include "fear," drawing on Hong Kong's legal practices and citing the city's National Security Law and Safeguarding National Security Ordinance as models for global counter-terrorism cooperation.

- Security Incidents and Threats

On March 3, 2026, Hong Kong Customs at Hong Kong International Airport intercepted two male passengers arriving from Penang, Malaysia, seizing approximately 1.1 kilograms of suspected cocaine with an estimated market value of about $1 million. This incident highlights ongoing efforts in border security against illicit trafficking. The Safeguarding National Security Ordinance (Article 23), enacted on March 19, 2024, continues to be a significant factor in Hong Kong's security environment, with Amnesty International noting its use to "normalize" repression a year after its passage, impacting freedoms of expression and assembly.

- Cybersecurity

The Hong Kong Computer Emergency Response Team Coordination Centre (HKCERT) released its "Hong Kong Cybersecurity Outlook 2026" in late January 2026, revealing a record high of 15,877 cybersecurity incidents in 2025, a 27% year-on-year increase. The report identified AI-driven attacks and supply chain vulnerabilities as the top five cybersecurity risks for 2026. Furthermore, Hong Kong's first cybersecurity law, the Protection of Critical Infrastructures (Computer Systems) Ordinance, which took effect on January 1, 2026, aims to enhance cybersecurity standards across eight critical sectors, including energy, finance, and telecommunications.

- Maritime and Border Security

A Hong Kong Marine Department Security Circular No. 02/2026, issued on February 20, 2026, provided updated arrangements for Chinese Naval Vessels escort services for Hong Kong-registered ships transiting the Gulf of Aden during March 2026. This service is arranged based on individual ship applications, requiring submission of "ship movement reports" to the Hong Kong Marine Emergency and Maritime Rescue Coordination Centre (HKMRCC).

- Counter-terrorism

The call by Hong Kong delegate Conrad Ho Pui-lam at the UN on March 10, 2026, to broaden the definition of terrorism underscores Hong Kong's proactive stance in counter-terrorism discourse. This follows previous large-scale interdepartmental counter-terrorism exercises, such as "Bravelight" in August 2025, which simulated responses to terrorist attacks on critical infrastructure and involved over 500 officers and 200 members of the public. The Police Negotiation Cadre (PNC) also highlighted its role in safeguarding national security during its 50th Anniversary Commemorative Symposium in January 2026.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

Hong Kong's security developments during this period are deeply intertwined with Beijing's broader strategic objectives, particularly the 15th Five-Year Plan (2026-2030). The central government's explicit directives for Hong Kong to enhance governance and integrate more effectively into national development signify a continued tightening of control and alignment with mainland policies. This push for integration, particularly in areas like technological innovation within the Greater Bay Area, positions Hong Kong as a "super value-adder" and a crucial component of China's economic and technological ambitions.

The diplomatic efforts by Hong Kong at the UN to influence the definition of terrorism, citing its own national security laws, reflect a desire to legitimize its internal security framework on the international stage, potentially setting precedents for how other nations approach similar issues. However, the continued international scrutiny of the Safeguarding National Security Ordinance (Article 23), particularly its extraterritorial reach and impact on fundamental freedoms, remains a point of contention with Western powers. Financial Secretary Paul Chan Mo-po acknowledged on March 7, 2026, the need for Hong Kong to remain vigilant regarding Sino-US relations and global geopolitical shifts, including the Middle East conflict, which could impact the city's trading sector while potentially benefiting its financial market due to its stability. This highlights Hong Kong's delicate balancing act between its role as an international financial hub and its increasing alignment with Beijing's geopolitical interests.

Military and Defense Analysis

Hong Kong's defense is primarily the responsibility of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) Hong Kong Garrison. The ongoing military firing practices at San Wai/Tai Ling and Tsing Shan Firing Ranges throughout March 2026, as well as the commencement of the 2026 training year on January 4, 2026, demonstrate the garrison's continuous efforts to maintain and enhance its combat capabilities. While specific defense spending figures for the Hong Kong Garrison are not publicly detailed, China's overall defense budget is projected to increase by 7% in 2026. This broader national trend suggests a sustained commitment to military modernization and strength, which implicitly extends to the forces stationed in Hong Kong. The garrison's activities are consistent with its mandate to fulfill Hong Kong's defense responsibilities and contribute to national security. There were no reports of significant defense acquisitions or arms deals specific to Hong Kong during this period, as the city's defense capabilities are integrated within the larger PLA structure.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): Hong Kong will likely continue its efforts to align with mainland China's 15th Five-Year Plan, with Chief Executive John Lee's administration focusing on formulating its own five-year development blueprint. The enforcement of the Safeguarding National Security Ordinance (Article 23) will remain a central aspect of the city's internal security, potentially leading to further actions against perceived threats to national security. Cybersecurity will remain a high-priority area, with continued vigilance against AI-driven attacks and the ongoing implementation of the Protection of Critical Infrastructures (Computer Systems) Ordinance.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: The primary flashpoints will revolve around the interpretation and application of national security laws, particularly Article 23, and their impact on civil liberties and the rule of law. This could lead to continued international criticism and potential diplomatic friction. The integration of Hong Kong into national development plans, while economically driven, also carries the risk of further eroding the city's distinct autonomy under "One Country, Two Systems." Cybersecurity threats, especially from sophisticated AI-powered attacks and supply chain vulnerabilities, pose a significant and evolving risk to critical infrastructure and economic stability.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the progress and specifics of Hong Kong's own five-year development plan and how it balances local interests with national directives. The number and nature of cases brought under the national security laws, particularly Article 23, will be crucial in assessing the ongoing impact on freedoms. Additionally, the frequency and sophistication of reported cybersecurity incidents, along with the effectiveness of the new cybersecurity ordinance, will indicate the city's resilience against digital threats. International reactions and diplomatic statements regarding Hong Kong's autonomy and human rights situation will also be important barometers of its geopolitical standing.

Strategic recommendations: Hong Kong should prioritize strengthening its cybersecurity infrastructure and capabilities, particularly in critical sectors, to mitigate the growing threat of AI-driven attacks. To maintain international confidence and its status as a global financial hub, the Hong Kong government should aim for greater transparency and clear communication regarding the implementation of its national security laws, addressing international concerns while upholding its constitutional duties. Leveraging its unique position within the Greater Bay Area to foster technological innovation and economic growth, while carefully navigating the political sensitivities of integration, will be crucial for its long-term stability and prosperity.

- Mayday concert axing resounds in sour note among fans (2026-03-12 04:18)

The Consumer Council has received more than 150 complaints following the cancellation of the opening night of a concert series by the rock band Mayday at Kai Tak Stadium. The event organiser confirmed on Monday that the concert scheduled for March 24 – the first of four planned shows – had been scrapped. The band from Taiwan was originally set to perform in Hong Kong on March 24, 25, 27 and 28 as part of their 29th anniversary tour. Ticket holders for the affected date are entitled to a full refund. In a statement posted on social media on Wednesday evening, the organiser also offered these fans the option of attending a special 40-minute rehearsal session on March 24 free of charge on top of the refund and apologised for the disruption. By 8am on Thursday, the Consumer Council had logged 163 complaints related to the matter, with total claims amounting to more than HK$447,000. Of the complaints, 71 were lodged by locals, with many saying they were dissatisfied with the organiser's failure to offer them alternatives such as priority ticket purchases or exchanges for other shows. The largest local claim involves approximately HK$7,900. The remaining complaints were filed by non-locals, most of whom were from the mainland, who expressed frustration that the organiser had not offered compensation for travel and accommodation costs. The highest claim in this regard was around HK$8,000. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme, Consumer Council chief executive Alaina Shum said the watchdog had reached out to the event organiser on Wednesday evening to seek clarity. "Our main concern is that we want to understand the refund arrangement," she said. "Its website previously said refunds should be made via the original payment channel if there haven't been any recent changes." Shum said the council was pressing for more specifics, noting that the organiser was expected to release more detailed information later on Thursday. "If it involves refunds, we need to see whether the channel is indeed the original one. We need to look at the timeline for when the refund will be processed," she said. "Also, we need to consider whether certain information will need to be provided by ticket holders, and whether that channel is secure, that is, consumer privacy rights must be protected." Following the cancellation of the March 24 show, Mayday has added a new concert, which will be held on March 29. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

- Licence warning as pig carcasses put shops in a spot (2026-03-12 03:47)

The Food and Environmental Hygiene Department has warned fresh provision shops not to place pig carcasses outside their stores or risk losing their licences. The warning came after the department recently recorded the first violation of this particular licensing condition since it was instituted in 2022. Officers found that a Kai Bo Food Supermarket outlet in Yuen Long kept pig carcasses outside the premises during special operations on more than 200 shops conducted across the city between late February and early March to clamp down on improper procedures after deliveries that increased the risk of rodent infestations. Officers issued more than 40 verbal warnings and initiated 21 prosecutions in the blitz. Speaking on RTHK, assistant director of operations Wan Chi-shun said the department was working to cancel the Yuen Long outlet's licence but that the final decision would be made after considering representations made by the shop. He warned that meat had to be properly handled. "Pig carcasses must be placed inside the store. The most ideal way is, first, to put it on a table," Wan said. "Second, some stores will hang it on the wall and not place it on the floor. "If they run out of space and need to use the floor, they can take appropriate measures – such as using suitable tools or items that can prevent contamination. These are acceptable to us." He went on to say that shops had to opt for items such as plastic sheets and wooden boards to place underneath the carcasses if they had no other spots apart from the floor. The department has also suspended a shop in Kowloon City from operating following rodent infestations. Wan said that even though the store had continuously carried out control measures following the suspension, it would only be allowed to reopen for business only when it met the department's requirements, describing the situation there as being "serious". He stressed that officers had continued to carry out random inspections, particularly during the early hours to target violations at fresh provision stores. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

- Ten hurt in chain collision on Tsing Ma Bridge (2026-03-12 02:27)

Ten people were injured after 10 cars collided in a chain-reaction accident on Tsing Ma Bridge on Thursday morning. Police received reports at around 8.30am of the accident involving multiple westbound vehicles heading towards the airport. Photos circulating online show one car ending up on its side, while the front end of another suffered extensive damage along with a shattered windshield. Officers said two people had been trapped but were conscious when they were extricated. Several lanes had to be closed to facilitate the recovery operation, with airport-bound traffic stretching all the way back to Stonecutters Bridge as of 10:30am. The Transport Department said the lower deck carriageway of Lantau Link has opened to traffic to ease congestion, and urged motorists to remain patient as they pass through the area. The MTR said it had stepped up services on the Airport Express and the Tung Chung line.

- Complaints after Mayday cancels opening concert (2026-03-11 12:53)

The Consumer Council has received more than 100 complaints after Mayday cancelled the opening night of its concert series at Kai Tak Stadium later this month. The organiser announced on Monday that the March 24 concert for the band from Taiwan had been cancelled. Mayday was originally scheduled to perform in Hong Kong on March 24, 25, 27 and 28 as part of its 29th anniversary tour. The decision, the organiser said, was made "to ensure that all performances are delivered in optimal form, allowing fans at each concert to fully enjoy the special moments of the birthday celebration” . Those who hold tickets for the affected show are entitled to a full refund. They can also attend a special 40-minute rehearsal session to be held on March 24 free of charge, according to a social media statement by the organiser on Wednesday evening, as it apologised for the inconvenience caused. As of 5pm on Wednesday, the consumer watchdog had received a total of 111 complaints related to the cancellation. Forty-two were lodged by local consumers and the rest by non-local customers, the majority of whom are from the mainland. The complaints involve a total sum of HK$296,194, according to the council. The largest individual claim from a local consumer amounted to HK$6,700, while the highest from a non-local complainant was HK$8,000. Grievances among local fans largely stem from the organiser’s failure to offer priority booking or ticket exchanges for other performances. Non-local complainants, meanwhile, expressed dissatisfaction over the lack of compensation for travel and accommodation costs. In a statement on Tuesday, the Consumer Council said cancelling individual concert dates would disappoint ticket holders and could disrupt the travel plans of visitors coming to Hong Kong for the show. The council urged the organiser to manage the situation appropriately, including considering alternative arrangements for affected fans. It also advised concertgoers to stay updated through official announcements and to keep relevant transaction records. Following the cancellation of the March 24 show, Mayday has added a new performance on March 29. Tickets for the March 29 show went on sale at noon on Wednesday. _____ Last updated: 2026-03-11 HKT 22:46 Edited by Edmond Fong

- HA aims to expand stroke coverage scheme (2026-03-11 09:49)

The Hospital Authority on Wednesday said it is looking to expand its pre-hospital stroke diversion scheme, which has been in place since last December in two hospital clusters, to all of Hong Kong, as a way to further reduce overall treatment times among such patients. In collaboration with the Fire Services Department, the scheme involves sending patients, suspected of suffering from a major stroke caused by a blocked main artery, directly to designated hospitals for treatment, aiming to decrease brain damage risks and chronic disability. This is on top of the authority's territory-wide pre-hospital stroke notification mechanism that was in place from 2021, with ambulance staff performing assessments before patients arrive at the hospital and informing the accident and emergency departments to make advance arrangements. Under the new scheme, patients within the New Territories East cluster would be sent to Prince of Wales Hospital, while those in the New Territories West cluster would be sent to Tuen Mun Hospital for clot busting. Up until this month, around 50 stroke patients were diverted to designated hospitals under the new scheme. About half of them received clot removal surgery. These patients had their waiting times from calling an ambulance to treatment reduced by an average of 80 minutes, saving time from hospital transfers and repeated assessments. “Every minute counts in acute ischemic stroke. For every minute, patients may run the risk of damaging or losing more than 1.9 million brain cells, so [the 80 minutes] is very significant,” said the authority’s director Wong Yiu-chung, who works on cluster services. “What we have so far witnessed is that this period of time can benefit the involved patient because those who are affected with major vessel occlusion can have timely surgery and treatment being delivered to the patient,” he added. The authority said it would gradually expand the scheme to hospital clusters in Kowloon and Hong Kong Island this year. It added it would continue reviewing data related to the scheme to ensure smooth implementation. Stroke is the fourth most common cause of death in Hong Kong, with the authority having received around 19,000 patients in 2025 and about 85 percent of them suffering from ischemic stroke. A police bomb disposal team safely dealt with a suspected grenade found in Happy Valley on Wednesday. Officers said they were called at around 1.40pm over the discovery on a slope along Stubbs Road. The device, which was said to be around the size of a lemon, was believed to be a British hand grenade. The Explosive Ordnance Disposal Bureau made the item safe. Police said no one was injured and no evacuation was required.

- 'Authorities made every effort to mitigate fare hikes' (2026-03-11 07:56)

A transport official on Wednesday reiterated that authorities tried their best to mitigate fare increases that are set to come into effect on April 1 on some outlying island ferry routes. Fares will go up by 12.5 percent for standard journeys from Central to Cheung Chau, Lamma, and on the inter-island services. Meanwhile, there will be no more ordinary ferry services to and from Mui Wo and Peng Chau, but the price for high-speed ferries will be slightly cheaper than the current rates. Assistant Commissioner for Transport Louisa Fung said the Transport Department made every effort to balance the financial viability of the ferry services with the interests of residents when vetting the fare increase requests. “Both ferry service operators have been struggling financially. Setting aside government subsidies under special assistance measures, the six routes would record a loss of approximately 35 percent and 50 percent,” she said.

“We have also noticed that ridership on the six routes has declined in recent years. Given the decrease in revenue coupled with the continuous rise in operating costs, there is a genuine need for fare adjustments to ensure the current service levels remain unchanged.” Fung said the approved increases are lower than the 20 to 30 percent rises requested by the operators. The assistant commissioner added that prices for multi-ride tickets and monthly passes will see smaller increases of eight percent, adding that this should be more bearable for the residents of the outlying islands. The double-digit percentage hike overall has drawn criticism from district councillors who warn that some residents, particularly elderly people, will be discouraged from travelling into urban areas. Fung said the department understands the importance of ferry services to the residents, adding that it asked operators to offer passengers more choices and greater flexibility on multi-trip tickets. - Cathay sees full-year profit and revenue soar in 2025 (2026-03-11 04:47)

Cathay Pacific Airways posted a 9.5 percent rise in full-year profit on Wednesday driven by a strong passenger traffic recovery and robust cargo demand and said it planned to lift capacity this year despite geopolitical volatility. Net profit at Hong Kong's flagship airline rose to HK$10.83 billion for the year ended December 31, analysts' estimates of around HK$10.05 billion and topping the HK$9.89 billion recorded in 2024. Cathay Chairman Patrick Healy said the airline expected to grow passenger capacity by around 10 percent this year as it added frequencies and destinations to its network, which would also boost cargo capacity. However, the airline faces headwinds from the ongoing Middle East conflict, which has disrupted global aviation operations, increased jet fuel costs and led some airlines to raise fares and boost fuel surcharges. "The prevailing global geopolitical environment is volatile, causing unexpected shifts in passenger and cargo traffic flows as well as jet fuel prices," Healy said in a statement. Revenue climbed 11.9 percent to HK$116.8 billion in 2025, driven by a 15.8 percent surge in passenger revenue as Cathay began expanding its long-haul network to North America and Europe. The carrier flew 28.9 million passengers during the year, a 26.5 percent increase from 2024, achieving an 85.2 percent load factor. This marked Cathay's third consecutive annual profit following three years of losses over the pandemic, during which it made heavy layoffs. (Reuters) Edited by Tony Sabine

- 'Shipping costs up by 20-30pc due to MidEast war' (2026-03-11 04:31)

A lawmaker on Wednesday said that the Middle East conflict was posing a burden on the transport sector due to rising oil prices, but a tourism sector representative said the impact was limited on air passengers. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme, transport sector lawmaker Lothair Lam said that overall shipping costs had risen by 20 to 30 percent. This came as fuel costs per voyage surged by US$200,000 to US$300,000, he said, and the closure of the Strait of Hormuz connecting the Persian Gulf to the Gulf of Oman had caused shipments to reroute, which can add an additional 15 to 20 days to the overall journey time. With oil production set to be raised by 206,000 barrels per day starting next month along with shipments rerouting away from the Strait of Hormuz to ensure a steady international oil supply, Lam believes the move would help tackle high fuel costs temporarily. "I think these measures will definitely reduce the oil price. But I don't think it will drop to the level seen before the Middle East conflict, as the situation there is still unstable," he said. "Twenty percent of the world's oil exports are from the Persian Gulf. As long as the situation in the Middle East remains unsettled, international oil prices will continue to fluctuate." He believes the higher costs would eventually transfer to consumers if the conflict continues. Steve Huen, executive director of EGL Tours, meanwhile, said the rise in fuel surcharges would not put a halt to people's travelling plans, even though Hong Kong Airlines will rise its fuel surcharges by up to 35 percent starting on Thursday due to soaring oil prices. He told the same programme the rise in fuel surcharges would not affect those who have purchased a ticket before the new price level takes effect. The increment only accounts for a small amount to tour fees, he said. "I believe people will not cancel their plans to travel because they have to pay some HK$100 or HK$200 to HK$300 more," Huen added. He also said that the cancellation of all Cathay Pacific passenger flights to Riyadh and Dubai until the end of this month had caused a major impact to his firm. Additionally, many tours, particularly those bound for Europe and Africa that were scheduled to depart in the middle of this month and planned to transit through the Middle East, were called off as there are no alternative routes, he added. Edited by Tony Sabine

- HK hosts Asia-Pacific smart customs conference (2026-03-11 04:29)

Hong Kong's customs department began hosting the three-day Regional Conference on Smart Customs on Wednesday, positioning itself as a hub for collaboration to accelerate digital transformation in border control across Asia-Pacific. At the opening ceremony, Commissioner of Customs and Excise Chan Tsz-tat unveiled the department's new Smart Customs blueprint, a strategy aligned with the nation's broader goals of enhancing intelligence and connectivity at borders. "Hong Kong customs has invested in artificial intelligence, blockchain, cloud computing and big data analytics to harness the bigger opportunities of cooperation and explore future potentials of economic development," he said. He acknowledged the immense pressure on global customs agencies, which are grappling with record-breaking passenger and cargo volumes. However, Chan stressed that while disruptive technologies are revolutionising daily operations, the role of human expertise remains irreplaceable. "In applying the disruptive technologies to assist in our daily work, our frontline officers' expertise and experience remain invariable in steering the technological development," he said. "Hong Kong customs now leverage advanced equipment, AI and big data to enhance risk targeting and clearance precision in various different fields of work." Chan also highlighted the critical need for a skilled workforce, stating that the conference serves as an open platform to cultivate talent across both the public and private sectors. Security Secretary Chris Tang, for his part, said the conference brings together more than 100 leaders and experts from over 30 customs administrations and the private sector across Asia-Pacific. He said the region now serves as the engine of the global economy, handling nearly 40 percent of the world's merchant trade. Tang said the explosion of cross-border e-commerce and regional supply chains has led to unprecedented levels of cargo flow, passenger movement and data exchange. "Traditional customs models characterised by paper documents, manual inspections, fragmented data and repetitive border clearance can no longer meet contemporary trade needs," he said. He warned that modern challenges, including counterfeiting, drug trafficking, wildlife smuggling and emerging digital trade risks, demand more precise and proactive border controls. "Against this backdrop, smart customs emerges as a strategic imperative by integrating digitalisation, data intelligence, automation and multilateral connectivity," he said. "Smart customs, on one hand, facilitates trade by reducing costs and speeds up clearance for legitimate business. On the other hand, it strengthens border security by detecting risk more effectively." Across the region, Tang said these initiatives are taking shape around four interconnected pillars, namely data-driven intelligence, digital single window trade, intelligence inspection and multilateral connectivity. - Customs crack down on fuel smuggling amid price surge (2026-03-11 03:48)

The Customs and Excise Department on Wednesday said it has intensified its crackdown on cross-boundary vehicles illegally transporting large quantities of petrol from the mainland into Hong Kong, a practice driven by the recent surge in oil prices because of the Middle East conflict. Speaking to reporters at a customs press conference, Commissioner Chan Tsz-tat said the widening gap between retail petrol prices in Hong Kong and on the mainland has created a strong economic incentive for these illicit activities. He said that some cross-boundary vehicles are exploiting the situation by using modified, enlarged fuel tanks to carry cheaper mainland petrol into Hong Kong. Once here that fuel is extracted and sold to illegal fuel stations, headed. Chan stressed the serious legal and safety implications of the trade. "Buying and selling untaxed petrol is illegal and carries criminal liability. Hong Kong customs will vigorously combat this because it involves not only tax evasion but also significant risks," he said. "When this untaxed petrol is put into private cars, there is a considerable fire hazard. This poses a serious danger not only to the vehicle concerned but also to the surrounding neighbours." As part of enforcement efforts, the commissioner said the department would seize vehicles involved in such cases and would subsequently apply to the courts for their forfeiture. He urged the public not to break the law for small gains, warning that the resulting losses would far outweigh any benefits. Beyond the fuel smuggling issue, Chan addressed the broader impacts of the Middle East situation on Hong Kong, noting that the department has observed considerable disruptions to shipping, as well as the movement of both people and goods. However, he framed the situation as both "a risk and an opportunity" for Hong Kong. "In fact, Hong Kong exemplifies how, under the 'One Country, Two Systems' framework, we are able to provide a highly secure, convenient and transparent customs clearance and transportation system in areas such as logistics and trade," he said. Chan outlined the department's forward-looking strategy. "In the days ahead, Hong Kong customs will continue to actively promote various trade-friendly measures to ensure that industries from around the world can conduct business, trade and logistics in Hong Kong with peace of mind," he said. "By providing a better enforcement environment, we enable businesses operating in Hong Kong to calculate their costs with certainty. This, I believe, is our advantage." Chan said the department would closely monitor the situation in the Middle East for any further impact on Hong Kong, particularly in maritime and air transport. He pledged to maintain close contact with the industry to provide appropriate assistance when necessary. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

- 'Double blow to elderly over ferry fare hikes' (2026-03-10 13:49)

Islands district councillors said upcoming ferry fare hikes may discourage elderly residents of outer islands from travelling, urging authorities to come up with special concessions to ease their financial burden. From next month, fares for six major outlying island ferry routes will go up, including a 12.5 percent increase for standard journeys to Cheung Chau, Lamma, and inter-island services. At a special Islands Council Traffic and Transport Committee meeting on Tuesday, many councillors said the elderly will suffer a "double blow" – the fare hikes coinciding with a revamp of the HK$2 transport subsidy scheme. Under the revamp that will take effect on April 1 as well, beneficiaries must pay 20 percent of the fare for any trips that cost more than HK$10 - instead of the current flat HK$2 rate. For an elderly passenger taking a high-speed ferry to Cheung Chau on Sundays or public holidays, the fare will rise to HK$9.50. Some councillors urged the Transport Department to explore targeted concessions for elderly residents of outlying islands, such as granting them a special exemption from the revamped HK$2 subsidyscheme or offering alternative subsidies to mitigate the impact of the fare hike. They also said since ferries are the only transit option for most outlying island residents, a double-digitpercentage hike overall is not acceptable. In response, principal transport officer Curtis Chi stressed that authorities have weighed multiple factors to balance the operational challengesfaced by ferry operators with the interests of residents. He pointed out that the approvedincreases were lower than those applied, noting that operators had originally sought fare hikesof between 20 and 30 percent. Many councillors also urged ferry operators to boostnon-ticketing revenue, such as by renting out pier space more often. They called on theTransport Department to upgrade pier infrastructure – such as constructing a footbridge toconnect the second levels of the outlying islands ferry piers in Central – to make pier rentalsmore accessible and appealing to potential tenants. Chiu said the department would continuediscussions with operators on increasing non-ticketing income and stressed that authorities areseeking ways to improve infrastructure at the piers in the long term. - 'Rising world oil prices hurt HK people, businesses' (2026-03-10 11:50)

Experts and representatives of the transport trade said rising oil prices, driven by the conflict in the Middle East, are placing significant financial strain on individuals and businesses in Hong Kong. The spike in global oil prices has begun to reverberate through the local transport industry, driving up fuel costs. Stanley Chaing, chairman of the Lok Ma Chau China-Hong Kong Freight Association, said the depot pickup price of diesel has more than doubled over the past two weeks, from around HK$4.9 per litre to approximately HK$10.6. Chaing described the speed and scale of the increase as alarming, noting that the added costs are hitting the industry hard, while self-employed drivers are facing even greater pressure. "The daily fuel consumption of a light truck and a heavy truck ranges from approximately 50 litres to over 100 litres," he said. "So maintaining a light truck, the daily fuel cost has increased by HK$200 to HK$300. For a heavy truck, the daily fuel cost increases by about HK$500 to HK$600. "Especially for individual operators, it's even tougher. They have to pay an extra ten-odd thousand dollars or so each month, which has a certain impact on their livelihoods." The pain is also being felt by everyday motorists at the pump. Leung, an insurance industry worker who drives to meet clients across Hong Kong, said his fuel expenses have gone up. "Of course, the impact is significant because the line of work I'm in requires me to go to many places every day," he said. The ripple effects are extending to air travel as well, with Hong Kong Airlines announcing it would raise fuel surcharges for most flights from Thursday. Professor Achim Czerny, from the Department of Logistics and Maritime Studies at Polytechnic University, said airlines often follow one another's lead on pricing. But he warned that higher surcharges could hinder the recovery of passenger traffic, which has yet to return to pre-pandemic levels. "In 2018, we had 75 million passengers at Hong Kong International Airport," he said. "Last year, only 61 million passengers, so what we would want is quickly recover and get back to the 75 million. "But of course, now the situation with the oil prices and then the fuel surcharges getting higher, this is not ideal." He added that while fuel surcharges are itemised separately, passengers ultimately focus on the total ticket price, making any increase a potential deterrent to travel. Edited by Edmond Fong

- HK welcomes more mainland companies: FS (2026-03-10 11:13)

Financial Secretary Paul Chan on Tuesday said Hong Kong's financial markets have buffered challenges brought by the recent geopolitical situation as the city continues to attract mainland companies to come here. Speaking at a spring reception jointly hosted by the government investment promotion arm Invest Hong Kong and the Chinese Enterprises Association, Chan said "doing our own thing" is of utmost importance under such global conditions, and the SAR should continue to push for development, as well as speed up the integration into the nation's planning. The finance chief also said more mainland enterprises can make good use of the SAR's advantages to go global. "We welcome more mainland companies to come to Hong Kong, to utilise the full-chain financial support as well as our advantage of being internationalised," he said. "The government has put forward the set up of a cross-sector professional services platform to support enterprises in going global, and the service will be available from this month." Chan also called on mainland companies to actively participate in the Northern Metropolis development to bring talent, skills and industrial chains to the city, saying the government has prepared a range of flexible policies to cater for potential investors. Meanwhile, InvestHK's director-general Alpha Lau said the number of clients at her office has reached an all-time high, with mainland companies and the SAR mutually benefitting each other. She said the agency will continue to attract investments and leverage the SAR's services, and proactively align with the nation's planning to serve broader development goals. As of the end of last year, around 3,100 mainland enterprises had set up shop in the city. One of them is Miniso, a retailer that currently has more than 8,000 branches across the world after setting foot in Hong Kong in 2015. Its vice president Alice Yang said the SAR's geographical location, as well as being highly inclusive and international, helped elevate the brand's reputation. She added they are planning to open more stores in the city this year. Edited by Edmond Fong

- Cathay extends Mideast flight suspensions to end-March (2026-03-10 08:37)

Cathay Pacific announced on Tuesday that it would continue with its suspension of Middle East flights for the rest of March due to the volatile situation in the region. The cancelled flights include daily passenger flights to and from Dubai in the UAE and the Saudi Arabian capital of Riyadh till March 31. The SAR's flag carrier said its freighter flights to the two places would also be cancelled. It said affected passengers would be able to rebook, reroute or cancel their flight tickets, adding it would monitor the situation closely. The airline also said it would offer extra passenger flights to London and additional capacity to Zurich in March to cater for a surge in demand to destinations in Europe. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

- HK Airlines to raise fuel surcharges from Thursday (2026-03-10 06:59)

Hong Kong Airlines has announced it is further increasing fuel surcharges for most of its flights effective from March 12, with those for short-haul tickets rising 30 percent compared to the beginning of this month. The changes came as oil prices continued to soar amid the escalating conflict in the Middle East, with the international benchmark, Brent crude, leaping 26 percent in Asia trading on Monday to as high as US$119 a barrel before easing. In a statement released on Tuesday, the local carrier noted that fuel surcharges for short-haul flights departing from Hong Kong will rise by HK$50 to HK$212, covering destinations such as those in Japan, South Korea and Thailand. The surcharge for flights to the mainland will rise by HK$5, to HK$190. Long-haul flights departing from Hong Kong will increase by HK$150, or 25 percent, to HK$739. There are also price increases for flights coming into Hong Kong. Separately, the city's flagship carrier, Cathay Pacific, said it had established a mechanism to review fuel surcharges each month. "As part of this process, we primarily take into account movements in jet fuel prices, rather than crude oil prices, together with other relevant operational factors, and make adjustments where appropriate," it said. - Islands ferry fare hikes move leaves sinking feeling (2026-03-10 05:03)

Islands district councillor Yip Pui-kei said on Tuesday many residents had been left with the feeling they had little choice but to accept proposed fare adjustments on six major outlying island ferry routes. Set to take effect from April 1, a 12.5 percent increase will be applied to a standard journey and freight service on routes to Cheung Chau, Lamma and the inter-islands services. Prices for multi-ride tickets for services to Cheung Chau, Lamma, Mui Wo and Peng Chau are also set to see an eight percent increase. According to a paper submitted to the district council, the Transport Department said the changes would be part of the renewal of the five-year operating licences for Sun Ferry and Hong Kong & Kowloon Ferry. The department said the fare hikes were "moderate and minimal" and necessary to balance the financial viability risks of operators facing declining ridership and rising operational costs. Yip, vice chairman of the Islands district council traffic and transport committee, disagreed. "The ferry service operators originally applied for a fare increase of around 20 percent to 30 percent. We – and the local community – have already given a lot of feedback to the Transport Department, trying our best to get the increase reduced," he said on an RTHK radio programme. "But overall the islanders feel they have no choice but to accept the fare hike – even though they think it's still too much in the way of what they should be paying for what is a daily expense." Yip added that the elderly would bear the brunt most as the revamped HK$2 transport subsidy scheme was also set to take effect from the beginning of next month. Following the changes, beneficiaries of the subsidy scheme will have to pay 20 percent of fares for trips that cost more than HK$10 – instead of the current flat HK$2 fare. Yip urged ferry service operators to offer discounts to the elderly, such as half-price fares and designated monthly passes. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

- 'Interpol event to showcase HK police's capabilities' (2026-03-10 04:56)

A former mainland security official said an Interpol annual event to be hosted in Hong Kong in November would showcase the SAR police force's capabilities. Hong Kong's hosting of the Interpol general assembly will see the city gather, for the first time, more than 1,000 police executives from around the world. Speaking to RTHK in Beijing, former vice minister of public security Chen Siyuan said the event held great importance. "This is a major event of great practical and historical significance. It is also an event that the Chinese authorities, especially the Chinese police, attach great importance to," he said. "It strengthens international exchanges and law enforcement co-operation to jointly combat transnational crimes. It is a meaningful event." Hosting the annual event in the SAR for the first time holds, Chen said, great significance. "[The meeting] would showcase the capabilities of law enforcement and international exchanges of Chinese police, including Hong Kong police," he said. "I believe this year's Interpol meeting should include rich content, including international law enforcement co-operation, and content that we need to discuss in accordance with Interpol's principles. "The content should be quite extensive and I believe [the event] can yield fruitful results." Chen said he hoped global law enforcement agencies could reach a consensus through exchanges at the meeting to step up their war on online scams as they were harmful to people all over the world. With the efforts of Interpol, mainland and Hong Kong police forces, he said, online scams can be rendered less ubiquitous to pose less of a risk to people and their hard-earned assets. Chen also called for closer co-operation between mainland, Hong Kong and Macao police forces. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

- 'More should be done to ensure Wang Fuk security' (2026-03-10 03:11)

A construction industry representative on Tuesday suggested that items at fire-ravaged Wang Fuk Court be returned to homeowners and tenants before construction works take place. Police have tightened security measures since Monday, after three construction workers were arrested for allegedly stealing valuables from a flat at the estate. These include requiring workers to store their personal belongings in lockers before they are escorted by officers, who will check for valuable items in units beforehand. Workers also have to undergo a body search with metal detectors after their work is done. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme, Chau Sze-kit, chairman of the Hong Kong Construction Industry Employees General Union said the measures have a deterrent effect, but cannot solve the problem. "Given that police can go in to make a note of the valuables, and we have a record of homeowners and tenants, why can't the items be returned to them after stocktaking?" he asked. "This can eliminate the motives, and it is also fairer to workers who are in situations where they are likely to arouse suspicion." Even though this way would cause delays to reinforcement works, he said, it can make homeowners feel at ease, and protect them as well as workers. He also condemned the alleged theft, and expressed regret over the incident. But Chau said he believes it is an isolated case. Edited by Aaron Tam

- 'Five-year plan crucial amid economic transformation' (2026-03-10 02:45)

The city's sole delegate to the top national legislature has said that the formulation of Hong Kong's own five-year plan will be crucial for the SAR amid a period of economic transformation. Starry Lee, who sits on the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, has also said the blueprint for the city will be in line with the One Country, Two Systems principle. A new national development planning law is currently under review at the annual Two Sessions in Beijing, highlighting the importance of One Country, Two Systems, and supporting Hong Kong and Macao in aligning with national development. On the sidelines of the annual political gatherings, Lee underscored the importance for Hong Kong to have its own policy goals. “Due to the lack of planning in the past, our economic transformation has yet to see obvious changes for quite a long while,” she said. “We have also seen that under the country’s plans every five years, the nation’s technological advancements and all aspects of development are progressing at full speed according to that plan.” Lee pointed out that it is important for the territory to serve the nation’s development, and pointed out that people should look beyond the chapter on Hong Kong and Macao in the 15th Five-Year Plan.

“Now our country is doing a lot of things to boost local consumption, [we should see] how we can help in this aspect. A lot of [mainland] enterprises do want to expand their market overseas. Hong Kong has its professional services and strengths to help all these enterprises expand their network outside the country.” Lee was among Hong Kong deputies to the National People’s Congress who met Vice Premier Ding Xuexiang in the capital, where he said the Legislative Council has “much to offer under the executive-led system”. The delegate, who is also the Legco president, said it is important for lawmakers to monitor the government by way of putting forward their own thoughts on improving what authorities have proposed. Monitoring officials does not necessarily mean opposing plans or using “relatively strong words” to criticise the government, Lee added. Edited by Aaron Tam

- MidEast war to pose minimal impact on HK: tycoon (2026-03-10 00:42)

The ongoing conflict in the Middle East should have limited impact on Hong Kong's overall economy due to the region's "insignificant" direct investment, according to a property tycoon. Far East Consortium chairman David Chiu added that there would not be much capital flowing out of the Middle East due to the conservative approach by wealthy families. Continued strikes by the United States and Israel on Iran -- coupled with Tehran's retaliatory attacks -- disrupted global supply chains and upended the world's energy and transport sectors. Chiu, a Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Standing Committee member, is currently in Beijing to attend the Two Sessions meetings. In an exclusive interview with RTHK, he spoke on a wide range of issues. "When it comes to investing in Hong Kong – direct investment [from the Middle East] – today is absolutely insignificant, and therefore, it won't affect our economy at all," he said. "But of course, on the macro-economy side, because of the war, interest rates may not come down as rapidly as we all want, oil prices may go up further. "I don't think we should expect, especially now [with] the war situation, too much money will come into Hong Kong for the time being." The businessman also gave a bright outlook of Hong Kong's housing market, saying he would "boldly predict" prices to rise by over 15 percent this year and the next. However, Chiu had reservations on Financial Secretary Paul Chan's decision to raise stamp duty for luxury home transactions valued at HK$100 million or more to up to 6.5 percent. "I personally think that it's a little bit too early," he said, explaining that developers rely on both buyers at home and abroad to recoup their investment. "Especially now, we need a lot of money to develop our Northern Metropolis, and that releases a lot of new investment for the developers. And the developers would not be able to invest a lot of money, unless they can release some of the inventory." Chiu, who's "very bullish" of the Northern Metropolis development, revealed his company is in the "final stage of negotiation" with authorities onland premium regarding a land parcel in the area. "We have a piece of land, which will... allow us to build about 600,000 square feet of residential [buildings], amounting to close to 900 units, next to the Hung Shui Kiu light rail station." Under a 2024 pilot scheme, the government will award plots of land in the Northern Metropolis to winning bidders for collective development. In submitting a bid, firms must also tender for a site reserved for technology development. To that, Chiu said it is a "new territory" for developers as they have to look for partners in the tendering process. Edited by Raymond Yeung

- 'SAR deputies should take part in external exchanges' (2026-03-09 12:28)

Local National People's Congress (NPC) deputy Ma Fung-kwok on Monday said Hong Kong delegates should be allowed to play a bigger role in the NPC's future outbound exchanges or overseas visits. His remarks came after Zhao Leji, chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, delivered the committee's work report at the second plenary meeting in Beijing. As one of the six main tasks for the coming year, Zhao stressed that the NPC would "pursue rigorous international engagement" to contribute to the country's overall diplomatic agenda. Ma, who led the Hong Kong delegation, said SAR deputies have a lot to contribute in this regard. "I suggested that Hong Kong can play an active role in international engagement. In particular, we have built a strong international network and have good language skills. However, we lack practice and experience in the area of 'diplomacy'," he said. "So I think if we could participate in outbound exchanges, it would also be a rare opportunity for the Hong Kong representatives to improve their capabilities." Hong Kong's sole delegate to the NPC Standing Committee, Starry Lee, echoed Ma's suggestion, saying SAR representatives could contribute further to the country's development. She also hailed the work report as being "comprehensive and well-written", noting that the NPC Standing Committee had "rigorously and meticulously" vetted a large number of laws and reviewed dozens of reports over the past year. Fellow NPC deputy Priscilla Leung, meanwhile, highlighted Zhao's call on NPC deputies to conduct more non-governmental diplomacy and strengthen collaboration with foreign parliaments. Leung, who also chairs the Legislative Council's Parliamentary Liaison Subcommittee, said she would consider ways to drive the initiative at the local level. Edited by Priscilla Ng

- Judy Chan fined, banned from driving for one month (2026-03-09 09:35)

Lawmaker Judy Chan was on Monday fined HK$2,000 and disqualified from driving for one month after pleading guilty to careless driving. The lawmaker was charged with careless driving after a video, which was circulated online in January, captured her driving against the flow of traffic in Wan Chai. In handing down the sentence, magistrate Ko Wai-hung described Chan's offence as "serious" and "premeditated", saying her decision to drive against the flow of traffic wasn't made in a split second and that the duration of her offence was not short. He said the sentence had taken into account Chan's clean criminal and traffic conviction records.

Speaking after attending the hearing, Chan said she regretted the incident and again apologised to the public. “Since the incident occurred I have stopped driving. I also promised the [magistrate] that I won’t offend again,” she said. “I would also like to apologise to road users for causing any inconvenience.” Chan said she would attend a driving improvement course despite not being required by the court to do so, adding that “although I might not drive again, but if I really need to drive again, I will only do so after completing the driving improvement course.” She added that Legislative Council president Starry Lee had given her a verbal warning over the incident. Lee, who’s in Beijing for the annual Two Sessions meetings, has said the Legislative Council’s supervisory committee would issue a formal response after reviewing the case. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Mandatory e-payment drive sits well with cabbies (2026-03-09 06:48)

A veteran taxi driver has welcomed an upcoming government regulation that makes the availability of electronic payments mandatory for all taxis, saying e-payment systems had already made journeys more convenient for both passengers and drivers and also boosted his earnings. From April 1, all taxi drivers in Hong Kong will be required to offer at least one QR-code-based and one non-QR-code electronic payment method to enhance service quality and improve passenger convenience. Cheng, a taxi driver with more than a decade of experience, said the policy shift has had a positive impact on his business. “Customers often check their wallets before getting in. If they have cash, they’ll hop in. Sometimes they don’t, but when they see my car accepts electronic payment, they will get in,” he said. “It definitely helps bring in more business.” Cheng noted that signing up for electronic payment systems was quick and hassle-free. He observed that most of his local customers preferred to use Octopus while tourists tended to opt for credit card payments. Ryan Wong, chairman of the Hong Kong Taxi Council, echoed Cheng’s sentiments, saying the new requirement would boost public confidence in taking taxis and improve overall satisfaction. He urged drivers who had yet to sign up to visit the nearest service centre and complete their registration before the deadline. “According to one of the biggest [platforms] Octopus, there have already been more than 40,000 taxi drivers registered for their systems and are ready for electronic payments,” he said. “We believe that already covers the majority of the taxi drivers, but of course, there are still some taxi drivers who have not yet completed their registration, so we encourage them to do it as soon as possible.” Wong said both the authorities and various e-payment platforms have ramped up training and technical support, especially for older drivers. He also noted that intense competition among e-payment providers had led many to waive activation and handling fees, easing the financial burden on drivers and encouraging adoption. Louisa Fung, Assistant Commissioner for Transport, revealed that about one third of taxis across the territory – including all taxi fleets – had already installed integrated payment terminals that accept multiple forms of payment. She also highlighted the Transport Department’s efforts over the past few months in rolling out publicity and educational campaigns, supervising e-payment platforms in hosting workshops, explaining legal requirements and providing on-site assistance to help drivers open accounts. - War fallout hits debuts of three IPOs in Hong Kong (2026-03-09 05:23)

War in the Middle East weighed on the market debuts of three Hong Kong listings on Monday that had hoped to ride a wave of momentum for share sales in the city this year. Shenzhen Zhaowei Machinery & Electronics, Estun Automation and AlSCO Pooling Service are the first Hong Kong share listings since the conflict broke out at the end of last month. Of the three, Zhaowei fared best, with shares in the micro-drive provider rising about four percent from its offer price of HK$71.28. Its initial public offering (IPO) priced the stock well below its maximum offer price of HK$73.68. Industrial robot maker Estun dropped around 14 percent after pricing at the bottom of its offer range. Reusable packaging service provider AlSCO saw its shares tumble 40 percent after also pricing at the bottom of its IPO range. AlSCO's retail tranche was oversubscribed more than 5,000 times, but that did not shield the stock from a sharp first-day selloff as investors took profits amid the jump in oil prices and broader macro jitters, said Dickie Wong, executive director of research at uSmart Securities. "This highlights a fragile market environment right now," he said. "Upcoming IPOs could face heightened volatility, subdued openings or even deeper dives unless oil prices and geopolitical tensions ease and the Hang Seng Index stages a meaningful rebound." Hong Kong has had the strongest start to a year for share sales since 2021, with IPOs and secondary listings in January raising around US$5.5 billion, LSEG data showed. A wave of Chinese companies planned to come to market after last month's Chinese New Year holiday, but face souring investor sentiment as the Middle East war sends oil prices surging and stokes worries about a hit to global growth. In a research note on Monday, CICC said Hong Kong equities were likely to be more volatile than the mainland's A shares in any oil-driven risk-off move, but warned prolonged high oil prices would still hurt China's economy. The three companies raised a combined HK$3.62 billion in share sales last week. Zhaowei raised the bulk of that at HK$1.91 billion, after launching its offer on February 27, a day before the war broke out. The company, which is already listed in Shenzhen, has said proceeds would be used for research and development and for capacity expansion, among other purposes. Estun raised HK$1.49 billion in its Hong Kong share sale, while AlSCO raised HK$223.7 million. The Hong Kong pipeline continues this week with MeiG Smart Technology scheduled to list on Tuesday after setting its offer price at the maximum HK$28.86. (Reuters) Edited by Tony Sabine

- NPCSC 'must push for sound start to five-year plan' (2026-03-09 04:28)

The chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee (NPCSC), Zhao Leji, on Monday said the committee must strive for high-quality development to contribute to a sound start of the 15th Five-Year Plan. The exhortation came as he delivered the NPCSC's work report at the second plenary meeting in Beijing, which was attended by President Xi Jinping and other state leaders. Zhao said it must uphold the president's core position in the party's central committee and in the party as a whole and earnestly carry out plans made during the fourth plenary session of the 20th central committee in October. "We must improve the people's congress system and deeply study general secretary Xi Jinping's key theory on it," he said in the Great Hall of the People. "We must uphold the unity of leadership by the party, the running of the country by the people, and law-based governance. We must develop whole-process people's democracy and work to ensure the people's congress system is upheld, improved and implemented successfully." Zhao also said there was room for improvement insofar as the legislature's work was concerned. "We are also keenly aware that there still exists a number of gaps and shortcomings in our work. The quality of our legislation must be further improved. The effectiveness of our oversight has room for enhancement," he said. Zhao also hailed the successful co-ordination and completion of the 14th Five-Year Plan amid what he described as a "truly remarkable" year in 2025. He said the central government had formulated policies that better addressed the needs of the people and improved livelihoods in 2025, as the congress implemented the major decisions and plans of the party's central committee. The government's areas of focus, he said, included protecting workers in flexible and new forms of employment, as well as deepening urban-rural integration. "We designated a number of topics for special reports, conducted thorough preliminary research, and fostered closer work communication, and urged relevant parties to take rectification measures," Zhao said. Zhao also said Beijing officials had arranged seminars for deputies from Hong Kong and Macao to provide them with the necessary information that would help them better perform their duties. "We have also strengthened the duties and oversight of management of their performance," he said. Edited by Tony Sabine

- 'Tightened security at Wang Fuk Court protects all' (2026-03-09 03:41)

Some renovation workers at inferno-hit Wang Fuk Court on Monday said tightened security measures can help safeguard workers and flat owners. The measures came after three workers were arrested for allegedly stealing jewellery from a unit of the estate. Workers are now required to put their personal belongings and cash into lockers, before being escorted by police officers, who will enter flats beforehand to check for valuable items. They are also subject to a body search with metal detectors after their work is done to prevent theft. A worker, Wong, said the new measures are acceptable. "We're just working, so the measures are alright. A body search is a must-do, given that we're working inside someone's flat. We have to put down your own stuff before going into the flat, it's just to protect ourselves and others," he said. But another worker, Chan, said theft is uncommon at construction sites. "I rarely see any stealing at sites, so it seems a bit excessive to enhance security just because of the incident earlier, given that everyone needs to do a body search," he said. "But I think it's still acceptable as it just serves the purpose of a security check," he added. Meanwhile, flat owner Au Yeung said he walks around the estate each day and sees a lot of strangers coming and going. "Will you let a stranger go into your house? The authorities should have let us go into our flats and collect our belongings before the workers come in and work. Who can we blame now if we lose anything?" he said. "Why don't they tighten security and let us go in three months ago? If they let us in and grab our valuable items, the workers could have done their work however they like without receiving any complaints," he added. Edited by Aaron Tam

- 'HK 5-year plan will uphold One Country, Two Systems' (2026-03-08 23:34)

Former chief executive and Vice-Chairman of Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference CY Leung has said an initiative by Hong Kong to draft its own five-year plan to align with the national development blueprint won't affect the continued implementation of 'One Country, Two Systems'. Speaking to reporters on the sidelines of the annual "Two Sessions" in Beijing on Sunday, Leung said a new national development planning law that is under review highlights the importance of One Country, Two Systems, and supports Hong Kong and Macao in aligning with national development. "Some people may ask: why is Hong Kong also doing a five-year plan? Does that make us the same as provinces and cities on the mainland? Does it mean Hong Kong no longer has One Country, Two Systems? No. The National People's Congress is now deliberating a National Development Planning Law," he said. "In this law, it is stated that the country upholds the policy of One Country, Two Systems and supports the two SARs in proactively aligning with, integrating into and serving the overall national development framework." He noted the SAR has long made sectoral plans – on housing, transport, and land. But he said Hong Kong's first comprehensive five-year plan to align with that of the nation's is different from past, single sector efforts. It will not be planning "in isolation", he said. Instead, Hong Kong will proactively align with the country's development agenda. Edited by Cecil Wong

- Wang Fuk Court security to be tightened: police chief (2026-03-08 11:02)

Police Commissioner Joe Chow said reinforcement works at fire-ravaged Wang Fuk Court would resume on Monday with tightened security measures in place. His remarks came after three renovation workers were arrested for allegedly stealing jewellery from a unit of the estate. Speaking at a press briefing on Sunday, Chow said more police officers would be deployed to the site to enhance security. He added that lockers would be provided for workers' personal belongings and cash. "We have arranged some lockers, some storage boxes, for all the workers to store their valuables like watches or jewellery, and they are not allowed to bring cash more than HK$500," Chow said. "But, of course, they are allowed to bring with them their mobile phones." Police will inspect units before workers are allowed to enter, he said. "Right after they go up to the buildings for strengthening work...my escorting officers will go in to inspect the premises to see if there are any valuables placed conspicuously, like on the table or on the shelves, etc," Chow said. "So if there are, they will make a record, and also, they will ask the workers to countersign, so that we are all on the same page." Chow went on to say that all workers would be subject to a body search with metal detectors after finishing their work inside the buildings to prevent items from being taken out. He added that the force received 81 enquiries related to Wang Fuk Court as of 5pm on Sunday, mostly from residents who were concerned about the security of their flats. Chow also said the force will conduct a review of the case involving three renovation workers who allegedly stole jewellery to see if negligence was involved. Edited by Aaron Tam

- 'HK, GBA tech parks can yield cutting-edge advances' (2026-03-08 08:21)

Businessman Irons Sze has called for collaboration between technology parks in Hong Kong and the Greater Bay Area to make advances in artificial intelligence and biotechnology. The local delegate to the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) on Sunday told a CPPCC plenary meeting that the focus should be on cutting-edge technology and striving for support to establish more national-level scientific research platforms. “[We should] treat the Northern Metropolis and the Hong Kong-Shenzhen Innovation and Technology Park as the core, and align with the development of the Greater Bay Area National Centre of Technology Innovation, to promote the collaboration between Hong Kong and Macao universities and mainland research institutions and leading enterprises to build more national-level laboratories,” Sze said in Beijing. He also said the SAR should focus on efforts to create the world's top innovation ecosystem. There should also be efforts in improving the financing mechanism, removing cross-border flow barriers, and promoting data exchange, Sze added. Edited by Aaron Tam

The MTR Corporation said Tuen Ma Line train services on Sunday were smooth, despite the implementation of special arrangements to facilitate track modification works between Hung Hom and East Tsim Sha Tsui stations. Passengers passing through Hung Hom Station on Tuen Ma Line were required to alight first and change trains at the opposite platform. The travelling directions of Tuen Ma Line trains at Hung Hom Station platforms were also swapped to facilitate the works. The MTR's head of Line Group Management for the Tuen Ma Line David Chan said the company would monitor the service operation and thanked passengers for their understanding. “To provide clear information, many signs at Hung Hom Station have been temporarily changed, including route maps, directional signs and passenger information displays at the concourse and platforms,” he said. “In addition, we have deployed staff on the East Rail Line platforms at Hung Hom Station. Before passengers interchange to the Tuen Ma Line, we would remind them to pay attention to the trains' travelling directions on Tuen Ma Line platforms.” Chan pointed out that the track modification works are being conducted to enhance passenger comfort and will not have an impact on travelling times. - HK enjoys opportunities under 15th Five-Year Plan: FS (2026-03-08 07:22)

Financial Secretary Paul Chan said on Sunday that Hong Kong has great potential, as the country's 15th Five-Year Plan brings boundless opportunities. He said the plan offers a clear direction for the SAR's future development. In a blog post, Chan said Hong Kong has unique advantages under the One Country, Two Systems principle. He said the city can contribute by leveraging the advantages of the vast mainland market and coordinating international resources. “As the country develops new quality productive forces and promotes the development of future industries such as artificial intelligence, low-altitude economy and biomedicine, Hong Kong can make good use of its advantages in international scientific research platforms, professional services and capital market to introduce global innovation resources to the country while injecting new momentum into the local economy," he said. Chan also said the establishment of the Northern Metropolis would further drive innovative collaboration in the Greater Bay Area. The finance chief also highlighted the importance of AI training in Hong Kong, saying it would ensure the workforce's adaptability to future structural changes in the economy. Meanwhile, Chan said that despite a turbulent global landscape and complex geopolitics, China has effectively withstood external challenges and maintained economic stability. Hong Kong must align with the 15th Five-Year Plan and work on its own five-year plan to drive high-quality development, he added. Edited by Aaron Tam

Chief Executive John Lee on Sunday described women as a "powerful source of energy for social progress" that is essential to Hong Kong's continuing success. Speaking at the International Women's Day Reception, he noted that women account for 54 percent of the city's population. "Over the years, in so many ways women have challenged prejudices, erased boundaries and embraced opportunities and done so through remarkable achievements in government, business, and professions, academia, the arts, innovation, family life, and so much more," he said. "Women are a powerful source of energy for social progress, women's talent and determination are essential to Hong Kong's continuing success." He pointed out that the number of female civil servants and bureau leaders reflects the government's efforts in promoting equal rights. "Among all civil servants, women account for 49 percent, directorate civil servants account for over 45 percent," he pointed out. Lee said the government has worked closely with the Women's Commission to expand opportunities for women. He also said that the second Family and Women Development Summit will take place on March 31. Secretary for Innovation, Technology and Industry Sun Dong on Sunday said construction for the remaining areas in the Hetao Shenzhen-Hong Kong Science and Technology Innovation Cooperation Zone had been accelerated. This came after the government proposed in its latest budget of earmarking HK$10 billion as initial capital to further develop the zone. Speaking on a radio programme, Sun said development for the zone had entered its second phase and the HK$10 billion would be used for public-private sector collaboration. Following the zone's launch at the end of last year, two wet laboratory buildings and one talent accommodation building under the first phase had been completed. Sun said construction of the remaining five buildings had been accelerated to get them completed ahead of the original schedule. "We launched the zone at the end of last year. We had previously proposed to finish the remaining five buildings in Phase 1 progressively from 2027. But now we changed our plan, and decided to complete them from the end of 2026," he said. He explained the latest Five-Year plan for both the country and Hong Kong was generating increased demand. "So now construction at the zone is happening 24 hours a day," he said. As the Hetao area is a "spade-ready site" and a key national project, Sun said the area possesses advantages for future land tenders. He also noted that authorities have received 27 letters of intent regarding the zone's Hong Kong Park section from local, mainland and overseas groups, reflecting a positive market response. Edited by Tony Sabine

Secretary for Innovation, Technology and Industry Sun Dong said on Saturday that a taskforce would be established to ensure that the development of a supercomputing hub at Sandy Ridge stayed on track. The move will come days after Hong Kong Range Intelligent Computing Technology won the tender with a HK$581 million bid. Under the terms of the tender award, it has to complete its investments of more than HK$23 billion over the first three years and begin operations within 42 months. The firm will lose its guarantee money of HK$400 million, or two percent of the targeted investments, if it fails to meet specified targets. Speaking on a television programme, Sun noted that the sole bidder faces a significant challenge. He said the land development cost was extremely high at over HK$1 billion and that the land premium only made up a small proportion of it. "The government will set up a dedicated task force internally to follow up on the project," Sun said. "It is not for monitoring but to mainly provide comprehensive support for the company so that it can fulfil its commitment as scheduled and in accordance with the regulations." Zhou Chaonan, founder of the parent company of Hong Kong Range Intelligent Computing Technology, told RTHK on the sidelines of the "Two Sessions" meetings in Beijing that she felt honoured that the company had won the tender award. She is confident that the company will meet the targets, given that the group has experience of more than a decade in the field. "We will work hard at building the data centres," Zhou said. "This is a duty we ought to be able to fulfil." The firm will work with universities and talents in the research, academic and industry sectors in the SAR, Zhou said, adding that the city holds high promise in artificial intelligence advances. Hainan may seek closer ties with Hong Kong to leverage the SAR's strengths as a free trade port, a delegate to the country's top political advisory body said on Saturday. Li Rongcan, who chairs the Hainan provincial committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC), called for deepening collaboration between the two places. "Hainan is the only free trade port with Chinese characteristics while Hong Kong is an internationally renowned and highly mature free trade port," he told a CPPCC plenary meeting in Beijing.

"Collaboration between the two places offers not just support for Hainan's development with the help of Hong Kong's capital, technology and international experience but also what it takes for the joint development of the Hainan free trade port and the Greater Bay Area." Li also called for support at the national level to foster deeper collaboration between the two places on commerce and finance. China has launched island-wide special customs operations on Hainan, the world's largest free trade port by area, allowing freer entry of overseas goods, expanding zero-tariff coverage and more business-friendly measures. Police launched an investigation after a man and a woman were hospitalised following a violent incident involving assault, arson and an apparent suicide attempt in Yuen Long on Saturday morning. According to officers, emergency services were alerted at 9.43am after a 31-year-old woman reported that she had been attacked by her husband inside a flat on Fung Cheung Road. She told officers that her husband also used a knife during the assault. Senior inspector Chan Man-hei said the woman managed to escape from the lower-storey flat and call for help. "Upon arrival, police arranged for the victim, who had sustained a hand injury, to be sent to Tuen Mun Hospital," she said. "Later, officers also found the suspect lying on the pedestrian walkway outside the building, believed to have fallen from height. "He was immediately rushed to Tuen Mun Hospital for emergency treatment. He is currently unconscious but in a stable condition." Chan said thick smoke billowed from the unit and that the Fire Services Department extinguished the blaze. "During the fire, around 30 residents heard the fire alarm and evacuated the building," she said. "The fire was quickly contained, did not spread to any other units, and caused no further injuries." Preliminary police investigations suggest the suspect, a 31-year-old man who runs a restaurant, had been arguing with the victim over business matters. "During the argument, the suspect became emotionally agitated, took a fruit knife from the kitchen. The victim immediately tried to stop him, and during the struggle, the suspect cut her in the hand," Chan said. "After she managed to take the knife away, the male suspect locked himself in the bedroom. While the victim was leaving the flat and calling police, the suspect used a lighter to set fire to the mattress and then fell from the unit." The police said the motive for the incident had yet to be ascertained. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

Beijing expects the current Legislative Council to be “more proactive” in aligning Hong Kong with the country’s latest five-year plan, according to local National People’s Congress (NPC) deputies. They were speaking following a meeting with Vice Premier Ding Xuexiang in the capital on the sidelines of the “Two Sessions” assemblies during which he directed Legco to come up with practical ways to better implement the executive-led governance system in Hong Kong. The city’s sole delegate to the NPC Standing Committee, Starry Lee, said she shared her thoughts on how to further develop the governing structure during the hour-long meeting with Ding. “I think he does, of course, expect [lawmakers in] this term to have a more proactive approach, especially when we talk about how to integrate into the 15th Five-Year Plan,” she said. “We will work according to his advice.” Asked about how the next SAR administration could follow through with the city’s own five-year plan, Lee said the focus of the development initiatives would always be geared towards helping the country achieve its policy targets. Fellow NPC deputy and finance-sector lawmaker Ronick Chan said Ding also called for vigilance in maintaining financial stability, which is vital for Hong Kong. “In terms of the current financial development, we have a lot of virtual asset products to be introduced in Hong Kong and also the wider application of artificial intelligence in Hong Kong,” Chan said “[Ding] reminded us to be mindful of the current development, and we must be vigilant [with regards to] the financial stability for Hong Kong.” Other issues discussed at the meeting included the recent Legco elections, the Wang Fuk Court blaze and “important national security cases” , said other NPCdeputies who were at the meeting. Edited by Thomas McAlinden

The government will take the necessary action and introduce measures to safeguard market stability as geopolitical hostilities escalate in the Middle East, according to Secretary for Financial Services and the Treasury Christopher Hui. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme on Saturday, he said authorities would monitor the situation closely and respond in a timely manner, acknowledging the Middle East’s critical role in global energy supplies. "Everyone is very concerned about the conflict in the Middle East because its continuation will have an impact on the real economy and other aspects. We are continuously monitoring this closely," Hui said. "In fact, this moment precisely highlights Hong Kong's role as a safe harbour. From the perspective of policy foresight and stability, this is an advantage amid major global changes." Hui also addressed the immediate impact of the Middle East conflict on financial markets, with Hong Kong stocks having experienced declines alongside other Asian markets. He attributed this volatility to rising global uncertainty, describing the stock market as a "thermometer" that naturally reflects prevailing conditions. Amid these challenges, Hui reaffirmed the government's commitment to its core duties. "As the government, regardless of the changes, we must do the right thing and do what we ought to do," he said. "This includes continuously maintaining market stability while simultaneously introducing different measures to develop our market." Edited by Thomas McAlinden

- HK's safety a big draw for overseas talent (2026-03-07 05:39)

Secretary for Labour and Welfare Chris Sun has highlighted Hong Kong’s stable and secure environment as a growing competitive advantage in the global race for talent, particularly amid the escalating conflict in the Middle East. Speaking on a Commercial Radio programme on Saturday, he said that against the current backdrop of geopolitical instability, Hong Kong's unique strengths were set to become increasingly prominent, both in the immediate future and over the medium to long term. Drawing on recent experience, Sun noted that feedback from newcomers consistently pointed to security as a top reason for their choosing the city. “One of Hong Kong's advantages that is frequently mentioned is safety," he said. "In addition to our strong educational resources and diverse opportunities, safety is a crucial factor – often ranked first or second – in their considerations." A secure and stable environment, Sun said, is valued immensely by global professionals. “With the shift in events, the importance of safety is growing," he said. "From that perspective, both my team and I believe that this enhances our ability to draw talent, not only from the Middle East but from around the world." While acknowledging that relocation decisions take time due to family and other considerations, the labour chief expressed confidence that the city's reputation as a safe environment would greatly amplify its ability to attract international professionals. Sun also revealed that, after three years of focused work, approximately 270,000 talents had arrived in Hong Kong through various talent schemes, injecting fresh momentum into the economy and yielding encouraging results. Among these, he said, the Top Talent Pass Scheme accounted for about 40 percent of arrivals. Sun added that the scheme boasts an application renewal rate of approximately 54 percent and a success rate of nearly 95 percent. The majority of these top-tier professionals are engaged in business and trade, he said, followed by the finance sector. A significant portion of these new arrivals, he added, is also contributing to innovation and technology, with one in every six new arrivals working in that field. Sun emphasised that these individuals were contributing to tech innovations and diversifying Hong Kong's economic development. Edited by Robert Kemp

- HK households face power bill hike as fuel costs rise (2026-03-07 04:43)

Hong Kong households may soon face higher electricity bills, as the conflict in the Middle East ties up oil and liquefied natural gas supplies and pushes up fuel costs. Speaking to reporters after a Commercial Radio programme, Billy Mak, an associate economics professor at Baptist University, said electricity bills in Hong Kong reflect fuel costs through the Fuel Adjustment Clause. "Yesterday, the oil price was about US$90 per barrel. This is pretty high because a month ago, the oil price was just about US$50 to US$60," Mak said. "So in the near future, we can foresee that our electricity prices will increase because the fuel cost adjustment account will increase," he added, referring to the monthly tariff adjustment. The clause reflects the difference between the projected and actual fuel costs for Hong Kong's two electricity providers, Hongkong Electric and CLP Power. Mak warned the cost of a barrel could surge to US$100 or even US$150, saying that when the Russia-Ukraine conflict broke out four years ago, oil hit US$120 per barrel. Oil prices have risen about 30 percent this week. About 20 percent of the world's oil and liquefied natural gas supplies are shipped through the Strait of Hormuz between Iran and Oman. Meanwhile, Chairman of the Hong Kong Shippers' Council Peter Hui told reporters that air-freight costs had increased by at least 20 to 30 percent due to the Middle East conflict, especially since airports in Dubai and Qatar are vital transshipment hubs for shipments from Asia to European countries. Import and export sector lawmaker Tommy Chung, though, was more optimistic. Also speaking after the same programme, he said that even though the conflict was a hindrance to traders in the short run, he believed it would be business as usual once hostilities ended. - No licence issued for alleged Kowloon Tong dorm (2026-03-07 04:34)

The Home Affairs Department (HAD) says a mainland organisation, which media reports allege is running a student dormitory without authorisation, does not hold a bedspace apartment licence. The organisation, Gleam Haven, in a recent social media post, said it was offering 60 bed spaces for students who had just arrived in Hong Kong at premises on Waterloo Road in Kowloon Tong. Regulations require any flat with at least 12 bed spaces to be licensed prior to operation, unless managed by a registered school. HAD said Gleam Haven had not made any applications. HAD said the Office of the Licensing Authority (OLA) has stepped up inspections of premises that claim to be student dormitories and boarding apartments. HAD said OLA had conducted around 3,000 checks between 2025 and January 30 this year, and that it had pressed charges against eight operators over unlicensed bedspace apartments between 2021 and 2025. All eight were convicted. The Education Bureau earlier said the Kowloon Tong premises were neither registered nor provisionally registered as a school. It also said it had not received an application from the organisation to operate a school at the site. Edited by Robert Kemp

- Legco urged to help better executive-led system (2026-03-07 04:04)

Vice Premier Ding Xuexiang has asked the Legislative Council to come up with practical ways to better implement the executive-led political system in Hong Kong. He made the remarks at a meeting on Saturday during which Hong Kong's sole delegate to the National People's Congress (NPC) Standing Committee Starry Lee said Legco plays an important role in carrying out executive-led governance. Ding urged Lee, the Legco president, to lead lawmakers on the matter. "The Legislative Council, in particular, has much to offer under the topic of executive-led governance, with ample room for implementation, exploration, and theoretical research," he said. "I hope that during the eighth Legco term, Lee will lead the legislature to explore, study and put into practice such an issue to yield more practical results that are in line with Hong Kong's actual situation and the central government's requirements." Other Beijing officials who were present at the meeting with SAR deputies to the NPC include Xia Baolong, director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office; Xu Qifang, the office's executive deputy director; and Zhou Ji, who heads the liaison office. The meeting came a day after the vice premier met Hong Kong and Macao members of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, where he had also said they shared a duty to better implement the executive-led governing system. "It is believed they stole the items from the unit that they were working in. Police arrested the trio for suspected theft," Chung said. "Officers have contacted the tenant of the unit, who confirmed ownership of the jewellery." Chung stressed there are security measures in place to monitor those who work in Wang Fuk Court. The SAR's women's football team returned to Hong Kong on Friday after pulling out of a tournament in Dubai amid rising tensions in the Middle East. The squad was initially stranded in Dubai, but they flew to Bangkok on Wednesday. Captain Ma Chak shun thanked the Football Association of Hong Kong, China and the Immigration Department for their help, saying she's glad all players and staff are home safe. "It's an unforgettable experience. In Hong Kong, we've never experienced any real threat to our lives. Now we're back, we will cherish each other more.

To safely return to HK, we feel fortunate and happy," she said. In a statement issued on Tuesday, the Football Association of Hong Kong, China, confirmed the team's decision to pull out of the Pink Ladies Cup 2026, saying their safety is the top priority. The squad had originally been scheduled to return to Hong Kong on March 8. Edited by Priscilla Ng

Three men have been arrested for conspiracy to rob after two people carrying HK$10 million were held up at knifepoint at Sheung Wan MTR Station in the morning on Friday. Superintendent Lo Ka-chun from the police's organised crime and triad bureau said the robbery attempt occurred after two victims had exchanged yuan and US dollars for Hong Kong dollars at a foreign exchange shop on Hillier Street in Sheung Wan. Police officers, waiting nearby as part of a stakeout following a tip-off, subdued two suspects on the spot. Another suspect, a driver who was waiting in a car nearby, was also arrested. Lo said all three suspects, aged between 19 and 31, were detained for investigations. The two victims, who were relatives, are residents of Macao and Hong Kong. One of them was in a stable condition after being sent to Queen Mary Hospital with an injury on the left hand, Lo said. "It has come to the attention of the police that there have been three robberies involving foreign currency exchange outlets in recent months, in which customers of these shops have been robbed," he said, with the two earlier robberies also happening in Sheung Wan. "The police attach great importance to solving these cases and has used intelligence-led operations to that end. "Using surveillance cameras installed as part of the SmartView programme, officers were able to collect important evidence to crack these cases." Edited by Tony Sabine

- Top advisers urged to do more for executive-led system (2026-03-06 09:19)

Henry Tang, a Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) Standing Committee member, said on Friday Vice Premier Ding Xuexiang had encouraged Hong Kong delegates to the top political advisory body to contribute more in advancing executive-led governance in the city. The former SAR chief secretary was speaking after taking part in a meeting between Ding and CPPCC deputies from Hong Kong and Macao during the annual "Two Sessions" in Beijing. Tang noted that Ding singled out for mention several significant events that happened in Hong Kong over the past year, including a Legislative Council election turnout that was higher than the previous one and the national security trial of Apple Daily founder Jimmy Lai. On the Wang Fuk Court fire that claimed 168 lives in November, Ding said the SAR government had "properly handled the aftermath", according to Tang. He also said the vice premier outlined five expectations for CPPCC deputies. One is to offer further support to the SAR chief executive and the government in providing executive-led governance. "The vice premier did say quite a bit about how CPPCC members can play an active and positive role in the executive-led government of Hong Kong," Tang said. "This role is demonstrated by the CPPCC members [having] in the past always contributed to the development of the mainland and we will continue to do so in many areas... the CPPCC members can continue to play that role in taking that lead and participate in the process." Tang added that people can also show their support for the executive-led system by backing the government. Other expectations Ding conveyed, Tang said, included ensuring a smooth subsector election for the Election Committee this year; supporting Hong Kong's prosperity and financial stability and accelerating the development of Northern Metropolis; and safeguarding national security to make sure future governments are led by patriots. Ding also said CPPCC delegates should be actively involved with the 15th Five-Year Plan, Tang said. "I think the most important point was that Hong Kong must grasp the opportunities presented by the 15th Five-Year Plan," Tang said. Using shipping as an example, Tang said some people might think it was a sunset industry in Hong Kong given the steady decline in shipping volumes over the past few years. He stressed that a lot of shipping-related matters involved opportunities in financial and professional services that Hong Kong could seize, as the 15th Five-Year Plan explored new development fields for the shipping industry. - HK should step up N Metropolis development: Ding (2026-03-06 09:03)

Vice Premier Ding Xuexiang outlined the need for Hong Kong to develop innovation and technology and the Northern Metropolis, according to local delegates of the nation's top political advisory body. Hong Kong members of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC), including CPPCC Standing Committee member Jonathan Choi, told RTHK that a two-hour meeting on Friday between Ding and delegates from Hong Kong and Macao covered the SAR's high-quality development, among other matters. Choi quoted the vice premier as saying that while Hong Kong excels in finance, the city has to build an international innovation and technology hub. "The Northern Metropolis is an area of concern for [Ding], and [he] wishes that we can... connect with the Greater Bay Area, Qianhai, Nansha and Hetao," he said. Choi, who chairs the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, also said that among the directives were for Hong Kong to align with the national Five-Year Plan, and that it is a shared duty to implement the executive-led governing system. "He hoped that the business community, CPPCC members, and people from all sectors of society would support the SAR government and the chief executive under the executive-led system, to govern Hong Kong well and maintain its prosperity and stability," Choi said. Fellow CPPCC delegate and former president of the Law Society, Melissa Pang, said promoting patriotism and safeguarding national security were also mentioned at the meeting with the vice premier. "There are external forces remaining in Hong Kong. We must stay vigilant and prevent foreign interference. We will take resolute and effective actions," Pang said. Edited by Aaron Tam

- Most childless women reluctant to start families (2026-03-06 08:34)

A new survey has found that a majority of Hong Kong women of childbearing age, who do not have any offspring, remain reluctant to have children, citing financial pressures, housing constraints and career priorities as key factors for their hesitation. The poll, conducted online in February by the Federation of Hong Kong and Kowloon Labour Unions, surveyed 550 childless women aged between 18 and 45. Around 60 percent of the respondents said they had no intention of having children while others would only consider having, at most, one or two.

Financial considerations and housing problems topped the list of obstacles, followed by age related and work related concerns, the survey found. Among women aged 36 to 45 who did not plan to have children, around one third cited physiological factors while age was a decisive consideration in the refusal by the rest. Career development featured frequently as a reason to delay or forego having children among women earning more than HK$50,000 a month. Childcare subsidies topped the list of incentives for most of the respondents at over 90 percent, and that was followed by enhanced tax relief and longer paid childcare leave. Federation chairman Lam Chun-sing said there was an increasing need for support measures as having two or more babies would exact a financial burden on both the grassroots and the middle class. "We hope that the government can provide long-term support for them because promoting childbirth is a long-term, not just a short-term, policy or part of one or two promotional efforts," he said. The federation urged the government to strengthen fertility-support measures through co-operative efforts with mainland medical institutions or funding for egg-freezing. It also called for stronger childcare and after-school support, including more nursery places, a higher subsidy for parents and extending the newborn baby bonus scheme, which is available up until October. A Beijing official said Hong Kong's judges handed down the right judgement in the case involving Jimmy Lai, founder of the now-defunct Apple Daily. Sun Qingye, deputy head of the Office for Safeguarding National Security, made the remarks on the sidelines of the ongoing Two Sessions in Beijing, after Lai was sentenced to 20 years in prison on three national security-related charges last month. Sun, also a delegate to the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, told RTHK that the judges in Lai's case should not be subject to sanctions imposed by foreign nations. "The judges handed down the ruling based on his criminal acts in accordance with the National Security Law. Therefore, they made a very good judgement. I think there weren't any flaws," he said. Sun also said he's not worried about new sanctions that may be imposed by foreign countries on Hong Kong and mainland officials. He expressed confidence in the situation in Hong Kong now that the National Security Law and Safeguarding National Security Ordinance, enacted in line with Article 23 of the Basic Law, are in force. "I believe Hong Kong's national security situation will be even better, with the safeguards becoming increasingly robust," Sun said. "In the coming five years, as long as the SAR adheres to the National Security Law and Article 23, I have full confidence [in the city's national security]." Sun also said Hong Kong should further enhance financial, technology as well as cyber security in the future to protect national security. Meanwhile, Lai's lawyer said on Friday he would not lodge an appeal against his conviction and 20-year prison sentence. Edited by Edmond Fong

The government announced on Friday that it had disbursed HK$6.15 million to the family of the firefighter who died while battling the Wang Fuk Court blaze last November. Senior fireman Ho

Wai-ho, 37, was one of 168 people who lost their lives in the Tai Po inferno. The grant was approved by the Committee on Financial Assistance for Family Members of those who Sacrificed their Lives to Save Others. Its chairman, labour and welfare minister Chris Sun, described Ho as demonstrating exceptional courage and a high degree of gallantry to save and protect other people's lives. "We deeply mourn the loss of such an excellent and devoted public servant," he said in a statement. "The grant represents the government's recognition of the late Mr Ho's gallantry and selflessness of the highest order." The government said the current range of grants offered under the scheme is between HK$6.15 million and HK$12.3 million. It went on to say that grants are worked out according to a formula with reference to the age of the deceased, normal retirement age, as well as the median monthly employment earnings in Hong Kong at the time. - Executive-led system 'needs support from everyone' (2026-03-06 03:59)

Vice Premier Ding Xuexiang has stressed that the executive-led political system in Hong Kong is “not a matter that concerns only the chief executive” and that truly implementing the governing principle is not an easy task. The senior Beijing official also told Hong Kong and Macao members of the nation’s top political advisory body on Friday that executive-led governance required strong understanding from SAR officials of their leadership roles in the territories. The remarks came in a meeting between Ding, a Politburo Standing Committee member, and the delegates of the Chinese People’s Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) during the ongoing “Two Sessions” in Beijing. “The actual implementation of the [executive-led system] is not an easy task,” he said. “It requires the chief executive and the government to strengthen their sense that they lead the SAR. “It also requires co-operation and support from all aspects of society, including the legislative and judicial organs. “The executive-led system is not a matter that concerns only the chief executive, it is also the collective responsibility of the Hong Kong and Macao governments, members of the public and all sectors of society.” The director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office, Xia Baolong, and CPPCC vice-chairman and former SAR chief executive Leung Chun-ying were among those present at the meeting. - 'Get guardians accredited for non-local students' (2026-03-06 03:44)

The principal of a school with a semi-boarding programme on Friday said the government should get guardians accredited to help tackle potential problems arising from an expected increase in the number of non-local students coming to study in the city. The government has approved 48 Direct Subsidy Scheme schools to increase the number and size of their classes in order to take in more non-local students with visas starting in the next academic year. Speaking on RTHK, Samuel Cheng from United Christian College (Kowloon East), also said there was a high demand for student hostels due to the expected influx, but more than 30 of the schools that had been given the green light for class expansion do not have dormitories. He said Hong Kong needs to get guardians accredited to help monitor boarders. "For instance, universities and tertiary institutions can set up guardianship accreditation programmes, so as to allow those who wish to host non-local students studying in Hong Kong to understand how they should take care of them and become an accredited guardian through such programmes," he said. Cheng's school has been operating a dormitory for over a decade. He said that it is vital for student hostels, which are privately run and not managed by actual schools, to ensure the needs of these minors are met and their living environment, as well as matters such as curfew and tutorial sessions, are handled properly. If they are unable to address these issues, they should not be open for business, the principal said. Cheng, who is also the external affairs secretary of the Hong Kong Direct Subsidy Scheme Schools Council, went on to say that dorm operators have to address students' psychological needs, as they can be homesick while struggling with the new academic system. On a more advanced level, dorm operators should also arrange activities to help students adapt to the living and learning environments in Hong Kong. Edited by Tony Sabine

- TKO Hospital probes patient's death after surgery (2026-03-06 03:38)

Tseung Kwan O Hospital has launched a probe into the death of an 85-year-old patient after surgery. According to the Hospital Authority, the patient, who had colon cancer, underwent a transverse colostomy on February 7 to relieve an intestinal obstruction. The procedure involves creating a surgical opening, known as a stoma, in the abdomen to allow waste to leave the body. The stoma was intended to be placed in the transverse colon. Following the surgery, the patient was admitted to the intensive care unit before being transferred to a general surgical ward. On February 16, she was moved to Haven of Hope Hospital for rehabilitation, where her vital signs remained stable. However, medical staff noted that the stoma continued to produce a relatively high output. On March 1, the patient began experiencing abdominal pain, low blood pressure and a rapid heartbeat. She was transferred back to the surgical ward at Tseung Kwan O Hospital the following day for further treatment. An emergency CT scan conducted on March 3 revealed that the stoma was located in the stomach, rather than the intended position in the transverse colon. Hospital officials reported that the patient then developed severe dehydration and supraventricular tachycardia, a condition characterised by a sudden acceleration in heart rate. The patient required cardioversion and medication before being transferred back to the intensive care unit. As her condition worsened, medical staff consulted with her family and agreed not to perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation. The patient passed away that evening from multiple organ failure. The hospital expressed deep sorrow over the incident and confirmed that staff have already met the patient's family to offer a detailed explanation and an apology. The hospital said it has also implemented immediate measures to enhance relevant surgical training and reminded medical staff to maintain vigilant postoperative monitoring. A root-cause analysis panel will conduct a thorough investigation, with a comprehensive report and improvement recommendations expected within eight weeks. The hospital has pledged to maintain close communication with the family and provide necessary support. The case has also been referred to the coroner for follow-up. Edited by Aaron Tam

The Immigration Department said on Thursday that it's doubled the manpower of a unit responsible for helping Hong Kong people stranded in the Middle East because of the Iran war. Those who require assistance can call the hotline, 852-1868. The department said on social media that it set up an emergency command centre soon after the conflict broke out, and the unit has been giving stranded residents advice regarding flight arrangements and itineraries. It said officers have been offering help through staying in close liaison with the Commissioner's Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in the SAR, Chinese embassies and consulates overseas, as well as the local tourism sector regulator. "The Director of Immigration, Benson Kwok, visited the 1868 hotline centre today for an inspection and listened to a briefing, while encouraging colleagues to keep working hard to help stranded Hong Kong people depart as soon as possible," the department said. It added that as airports in the region gradually resume limited operations, the centre will stay in contact with the hundreds of Hongkongers and help them return home. Edited by Priscilla Ng

- Report responds to global challenges: NPC deputies (2026-03-05 13:01)

Local National People's Congress (NPC) deputies have hailed a government work report unveiled by the country's leaders, saying it is effective in responding to external challenges. Beijing has set an economic growth target of 4.5 percent to 5 percent for the year. Ronick Chan, a Hong Kong member and lawmaker, said setting a range for the nation's GDP growth target allows for more flexibility in implementing fiscal and monetary policies. "As we all know, the international situation is complex and ever-changing, and setting a single target may make the country's policies passive," Chan said. "Having a range can set a base with the lower limit, while having the upper limit as a goal to work towards." Fellow NPC deputy Priscilla Leung said the work report – delivered by Premier Li Qiang – not only outlines the direction of developments at home, but also carries "huge international value". "Under the uncertain international economic and political situation in the world, China has provided a very practical work report together with an international strategic development for humankind," Leung said. - HK cruises ahead towards green fuel supply chain (2026-03-05 08:13)

Hong Kong has been building a comprehensive supply chain for green fuel since rolling out the Action Plan on Green Maritime Fuel Bunkering in November 2024, Secretary for Transport and Logistics Mable Chan said. Officiating at the first green methanol bunkering ceremony on Thursday, Chan said the SAR had established itself as a port for regular operations and bunkering involving liquefied natural gas and biofuel. "Last year, we carried out 16 bunkering operations for liquefied natural gas and 110 operations for biofuels, involving up to 220,000 tonnes of fuel-loading capacity for marine vessels," she said. "We will focus on green methanol next to provide global shipping companies with a comprehensive supply chain and trading environment, with the aim of offering the best solution for different stakeholders in the international shipping industry." To achieve the goal, Chan said, the Marine Department had already released a set of working guidelines on methanol bunkering. She added the relevant tax incentive policies had gained support from the Legislative Council. Sinopec Hong Kong, the company providing green methanol for the ceremony, said it was planning to build a storage facility for the fuel in the city, after it became the first company in the SAR to blend and provide biofuel in July – with the amount supplied so far exceeding 50,000 tonnes. Clean energy storage facility provider, CIMC Enric, said Hong Kong could offer a great opportunity for the development of green methanol bunkering despite limitations in operational costs and space. It was also confident that the city's competitiveness in biofuels would continue to rise in the future. Edited by Tony Sabine

- 'HK should strategise to keep its doctoral graduates' (2026-03-05 07:03)

Hong Kong should strengthen its strategies for retaining doctoral graduates so as to allow them to pursue their academic careers in Hong Kong more easily. This would consolidate the city's leading position among global tertiary education hubs, a new study by Hang Seng University suggested. The study conducted between September 2025 and February 2026 draws on comparative policy analysis and in-depth interviews with 50 doctoral students and university leaders in Hong Kong, Singapore, Malaysia, and the UK. Provost and vice-president of the university Joshua Mok said the study shows Hong Kong's immigration policies and post-study work opportunities are the most decisive factors influencing international doctoral students' choices. Currently, non-local university graduates can stay in Hong Kong for two years without a job offer. Mok suggested lengthening this period to attract more students and graduates to Hong Kong. "If the government is very keen to retain those talent trained in Hong Kong for some selected area of high technology, which Hong Kong and also our country really needs, then the government may be more open in retaining them... maybe [for] a longer period of time for them to stay in Hong Kong for [the] further enhancement of the research," Mok said. He also urged the government to deepen local research investment, promote the strengths of local doctoral programmes, collaborate with mainland universities and offer housing and living cost support to graduate students. Mok noted students were also concerned about geopolitical tensions affecting research collaboration, mobility, travel opportunities and visa process when deciding on study destinations. Amid the ongoing conflict in the Middle East, Mok anticipated more students from the Middle East would come to Hong Kong and other Asian regions for their studies instead of the US due to existing tensions. "My experience of working with colleagues and students coming from the Belt and Road and Middle East is that they're very hard working... if we can attract them and retain them, it would be to the advantage of Hong Kong as a hub in future," he said. Chief Executive John Lee has pledged to formulate a "broad, strategic and forward-looking" five-year plan for Hong Kong, which is expected to be completed within this year. The city's leader attended Thursday's opening of the National People's Congress in Beijing, during which the country unveiled its development targets for the 15th Five-Year Plan and mentioned the SAR in the work report. Lee, on social media, said his administration will unswervingly implement One Country, Two Systems, and unite all sectors to further deepen reforms and make better use of the city's advantages. He also vowed to lead SAR authorities in aligning with the nation's 15th Five-Year Plan. "We will make a more comprehensive, precise and detailed strategic deployment of key development areas and formulate the first broad, strategic and forward-looking five-year plan for Hong Kong," Lee wrote. The chief executive said officials are committed to building an international innovation and technology centre and bring in more high-value-added industries to settle in the Northern Metropolis. The city will explore emerging markets and deepen international collaboration, Lee added. Edited by Aaron Tam

- '4.5-5pc growth target a reasonable forecast' (2026-03-05 04:41)

Hong Kong deputies attending the annual “Two Sessions” meetings in Beijing on Thursday voiced support for the country’s economic growth target of between 4.5 percent and five percent this year, saying it was a reasonable forecast given the current geopolitical instability. Henry Tang, former financial secretary and a local Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) Standing Committee member, said he was confident the country could meet the target. “I believe the forecast for this year at 4.5 percent to five percent is a reasonable forecast. Last year we achieved five percent growth despite the circumstances being quite challenging,” he said. “It is a reflection and a ratification of the country's leadership and the party's leadership. So I am confident that we will be able to achieve the forecast growth.” Local CPPCC delegate and non-executive chairman of HSBC, Peter Wong, also said he believes the growth target is suitable. “Because the economic base is getting larger, a 4.5 percent growth rate is actually very impressive. This indicator is a very solid benchmark, especially given the current state of global instability,” he said. Meanwhile, CPPCC Standing Committee member and mainland economist Justin Lin said he expects steady and sustained growth throughout the 15th Five-Year Plan period. “This can be extrapolated from the growth target of 4.5 percent to 5 percent this year,” he said. “The economy has increased by 10 trillion yuan every year over the past years. I believe this growth rate will continue.” He added that China’s total economic output could “very likely” reach 170-180 trillion yuan in five years. Edited by Tony Sabine Premier Li Qiang pledged in his annual work report that the central government will fully implement One Country, Two Systems, while reiterating Beijing's resolve to advance the cause of national unification. Li made the remarks at the opening of the annual National People's Congress in Beijing on Thursday. Apart from recapping the government's work in 2025, he also laid down 10 targets for this year. Hong Kong came up numerous times in the 35-page report, most notably in the 10th and final target of "strengthening risk prevention and mitigation, and enhancing security capacity in key areas". "We will resolutely implement the policy of One Country, Two Systems, under which the people of Hong Kong administer Hong Kong, and the people of Macao administer Macao," the premier read. "And we will see that Hong Kong and Macao are administered by patriots, so as to raise the governance efficiency and foster economic and social development." He also pledged support for the two SARs to integrate into and serve the country's overall development. The report also called for the full integration of technological innovation and industrial innovation, including the construction of a world-class tech hub in the Greater Bay Area. On the Taiwan issue, Li made clear Beijing's position. "We will stay committed to the One-China principle and the 1992 Consensus, resolutely fight against separatist forces aimed at 'Taiwan independence', and oppose external interference so as to promote the peaceful development of cross-strait relations and advance the cause of national reunification," he said. Edited by Cecil Wong

Health and sports experts have welcomed the city's first-ever action plan to tackle rising obesity rates but pointed out that the biggest hurdle isn't just dietary or a lack of exercise but a significant "cognitive gap" where people simply do not realise they are overweight. The three-year strategy, launched on World Obesity Day on Wednesday, aims to curb obesity through a cross-departmental approach built on five key pillars – strengthening health education, fostering a supportive social environment, enhancing healthcare services, adopting a life-course approach to health promotion and continuously monitoring weight trends. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme, Dr Anne Chee, head of the non-communicable disease branch at the Department of Health, said data from a 2022 health survey showed that over half of Hong Kong adults are either overweight or obese. "In Hong Kong, over half of chronic diseases are related to obesity," she said. "Many people with obesity also suffer from diabetes, high cholesterol and high blood pressure. It is very possible that over half of these individuals have these comorbidity issues." However, Chee noted a major disconnect in public perception. "Hong Kong citizens have pretty good self-perception. We see that among overweight individuals, two thirds feel their weight is just right, or even feel that they are too thin," she said. "The downside is that in the past year, many of them haven't done anything to control their weight, so we see a significant perception gap." Chee emphasised that many people might not fully understand how to calculate their body mass index, underscoring the need for intensified public education. The plan distinguishes itself by adopting a "whole-of-government and community approach", she said, adding willpower and clinical care alone cannot solve the obesity crisis and that the broader environment must also support healthy choices. As such, Chee said, the initiative brings together health services, education, labour safety, public housing management and urban planning, with practical steps including improving access to local services and providing multi-disciplinary support – from nurses and dietitians to occupational therapists – at district health centres. Urban planning will also play a role, with plans to expand exercise infrastructure in public housing estates and new guidelines encouraging pedestrian-friendly waterfronts, cycling paths and building designs that nudge people to use stairs. "We hope that after three years of effort, Hong Kong citizens' knowledge of weight management, including how to manage it, can increase by 10 percent," Chee said. "Our aim, in line with global targets, is to halt the upward trend of obesity – to stop it from rising further." Speaking on the same programme, sports professor Lobo Louie from the Education University welcomed the initiative but warned that changing behaviour patterns was a long game. "The biggest difficulty is that people lack motivation," he said. "There is an interesting analysis from the US. If you buy an exercise bike for home, on average, after three to six months, it will disappear because you've lost motivation, and you've probably started draping clothes over it." He stressed that while the action plan was a positive step, "raising awareness and promoting active behaviour is the crucial strategy in promoting healthy living, especially weight management". A lawmaker on Thursday called on the government to set up a student dormitory licensing system, after media reports alleged that a mainland organisation is operating such a facility without authorisation. The group – Gleam Haven – marketed itself as a trilingual secondary school, located at 101 Waterloo Road in Kowloon Tong, that offers 60 beds for students who have just arrived in Hong Kong. Education sector legislator Tang Fei told RTHK that the closest thing to a student dormitory licence is a bedspace apartment licence. But, noting that many newly-arrived students are not adults, he pointed out that bedspace licences have no guidelines on supporting measures, such as whether or not guests have to have guardians. "Can we set up a student dormitory licence or boarding licence? Certainly, it will be different from those in mainstream schools," he said. "But we can reference them, such as the student-teacher ratio for a housemaster, and whether there is a need for a social worker. This is worth looking into, and stepping up legislation." He went on to say that the government should offer unified licensing to save applicants' time, and believed demand for such services will go up under the "Study in Hong Kong" brand. Shang Hailong, the founding president of the Hong Kong Top Talent Services Association told the same programme that he is concerned about the students' safety as he suspected there are unauthorised works at the Gleam Haven site. He suggested the government should offer more guidelines – such as by taking reference to the hardware requirements similar to those for guesthouses or basic housing units – to schools that wish to set up dormitories for students from outside the territory. The Buildings Department told RTHK that it has found existing and newly built unauthorised structures at the site's courtyard, but they pose no immediate danger. It said a removal notice has been issued to the owners, adding that it will follow up on enforcement actions. Edited by Aaron Tam
