Executive Summary

Macau's security landscape during the period of April 25 to May 02, 2026, was characterized by a complex interplay of internal crime trends, heightened national security measures, and persistent cyber threats. While overall crime rates for 2025 showed a decrease, a significant surge in gaming-related crimes and disturbing increases in child sexual abuse cases were reported in late April 2026, indicating evolving internal security challenges. The implementation of a new national security law in March 2026, allowing for closed-door trials, has solidified Beijing's control and raised concerns among human rights observers regarding legal transparency. Concurrently, Macau's government websites faced DDoS attacks by suspected foreign actors, underscoring critical cybersecurity vulnerabilities. The PLA Macau Garrison maintained its public engagement through an Open Day, while Macau's police participated in a regional counter-terrorism drill, highlighting ongoing efforts in both internal stability and cross-border security cooperation.

Key Security Developments

- Security Incidents and Threats (Crime Statistics)

Macau's overall criminal cases decreased by 5.9% in 2025, totaling 13,458, compared to 14,298 in 2024, according to statistics released by the Office of the Secretary for Security in late April 2026. However, this overall decline masks significant increases in specific crime categories, particularly those related to the gaming industry and vulnerable populations.

- Surge in Gaming-Related Crimes

Gaming-related crimes in Macau rose sharply by 63% in 2025, reaching 2,373 cases, up from 1,456 in 2024. This increase was primarily attributed to the criminalization of unlicensed money exchange for gambling purposes under the "Law to Combat Crimes of Illegal Gambling," which came into effect on October 29, 2024. Cases of illegal money exchange jumped by 429% to 471, and gaming-related fraud doubled to 667 cases, with many linked to illicit currency transactions. Robberies connected to casinos also saw a 250% increase, from 4 to 14 cases, and offenses like assault and intimidation climbed by nearly 60%.

- Increase in Sexual Assault Against Children

Disturbingly, cases of sexual assault against children (minors under 14) surged by 77.3% to 39 cases in 2025, compared to 22 cases in 2024. Statutory rape of minors also rose by 66.7% to 10 cases. This trend highlights a critical vulnerability in public safety concerning minors.

- National Security Law Implementation

Macau's Legislative Assembly unanimously passed a new national security law on March 19, 2026, which allows judges to conduct national security trials behind closed doors and mandates defense lawyers to obtain clearances from national security officials. The law, which buttresses Macau's Committee for Safeguarding National Security (CDSE), aims to strengthen the framework for national security and reinforces the principle of "patriots governing Macau." Human rights groups, including Human Rights Watch, have expressed concerns that the legislation could be open to government misuse and undermine legal transparency.

- Cybersecurity Incidents and Threats

Macau government websites, including those of the Office of the Secretary for Security, the Public Security Police, and the Fire Services Department, were affected by a Distributed Denial-of-Service (DDoS) attack by suspected foreign hackers, as reported on April 24, 2026. Authorities initiated an emergency response and instructed Macau Telecom to investigate the incident and propose an improvement plan. This incident is part of an increasing pattern, with cybercrime frequency reportedly tripling since 2020, targeting Macau's critical infrastructure.

- PLA Macau Garrison Open Day

The Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) Macau Garrison hosted its annual Open Day at its Taipa base on May 1-2, 2026. The event, restricted to Macau residents, offered 2,600 places each day and included a national flag-raising ceremony, serving to foster patriotic education and community engagement.

- Regional Counter-terrorism and Cybersecurity Exercise

The Macau Judiciary Police participated in the Counter Cyber & Physical Terrorism Joint Exercise 2026, codenamed "STEALTHNET," on April 16, 2026. Coordinated by the Hong Kong Police Force with INTERPOL and police forces from Singapore and Korea, the exercise simulated cyber and physical attacks by a cross-boundary terrorist cell targeting financial, aviation, and healthcare systems across the participating regions. This highlights Macau's involvement in enhancing regional preparedness against hybrid terrorist threats.

- Border Security Enforcement

Between January and April 20, 2026, Macau authorities denied entry to over 2,500 mainland Chinese passport holders due to suspected abuse of the city's transit entry arrangements. These individuals were refused entry for failing to present valid onward travel documents, not proceeding to a third country, or making frequent entries to circumvent stay regulations. In response, Macau has tightened enforcement, including reducing permitted stay durations for repeat offenders.

- Overstayers and Illegal Workers

Mainland Chinese nationals accounted for the majority of Macau's 14,200 overstayers in 2025, with illegal worker cases increasing by 27%. This indicates ongoing challenges in managing immigration and labor regulations.

- Alignment with National Five-Year Plan

Macau's Chief Executive, Sam Hou Fai, emphasized on April 15, 2026, the integration of national security requirements throughout Macau's 3rd Five-Year Plan, aligning it with China's 15th Five-Year Plan (2026-2030). This strategic alignment underscores Macau's commitment to national development and security objectives.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

Macau's security developments during this period are deeply intertwined with Beijing's broader strategic objectives for its Special Administrative Regions (SARs) and the Greater Bay Area. The new national security law, passed in March 2026, significantly strengthens the central government's oversight, allowing for closed-door trials and requiring lawyer clearances in national security cases. This move, while framed by Macau authorities as essential for safeguarding national security and upholding the "patriots governing Macau" principle, mirrors similar legislative actions in Hong Kong and signals a continued tightening of political control from Beijing. The emphasis on preventing "external interference" by the MSAR Government on April 15, 2026, further reflects a defensive posture against perceived foreign influence in its internal affairs.

Macau's participation in the Counter Cyber & Physical Terrorism Joint Exercise 2026 alongside Hong Kong, Singapore, and Korea demonstrates its role in regional security cooperation, particularly in addressing modern, hybrid threats. This collaboration, however, operates within the overarching framework of China's foreign policy and security interests. While Macau maintains some autonomy in external economic and cultural relations, its defense and high-level diplomatic engagements are ultimately directed by Beijing. The alignment of Macau's 3rd Five-Year Plan with China's 15th Five-Year Plan, with a dedicated section for Hong Kong and Macau, further solidifies its integration into the national development framework, particularly within the Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area.

Economically, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) raised Macau's growth forecast for 2026 to 3% in April 2026, indicating a steady recovery. However, a report from April 2025 (cited in April 2026 news) suggests that Macau's biggest near-term risks are fundamental economic challenges rather than geopolitical ones, such as US-China trade tensions. Despite this, the surge in gaming-related crimes, including illegal money exchange and fraud, highlights vulnerabilities within its core industry that could attract international criminal networks and potentially impact its financial reputation. The ongoing efforts to manage large tourist flows and combat illegal transit schemes also underscore the delicate balance between economic openness and border security.

Military and Defense Analysis

Macau, as a Special Administrative Region of China, does not possess its own independent military. Its defense is the responsibility of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) Macau Garrison, which has been stationed in the territory since its handover in 1999. The PLA Garrison's activities primarily focus on maintaining stability, national security, and community engagement, rather than independent defense operations.

During this reporting period, the most notable military-related event was the PLA Macau Garrison's annual Open Day at its Taipa base on May 1-2, 2026. This event, open to Macau residents, serves as a public relations exercise, showcasing the PLA's presence and fostering patriotic sentiment among the local population. While not a direct military exercise, it reinforces the garrison's role in the SAR's security architecture and its connection to the community. President Xi Jinping, during a visit in December 2024, had previously urged the PLA garrison to enhance its defense capabilities and contribute to the "one country, two systems" framework, indicating a continuous emphasis on readiness and its foundational role in Macau's stability. The garrison's force posture is primarily geared towards internal security and symbolic representation of national sovereignty, rather than external defense against conventional military threats. Modernization programs and defense spending trends for Macau are integrated within the broader PLA budget and strategic planning, with no independent allocations for the SAR.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): In the immediate future, Macau is likely to continue its intensified focus on internal security and law enforcement, particularly in combating gaming-related crimes and managing border integrity. The recent release of 2025 crime statistics, highlighting surges in illegal money exchange, gaming fraud, and child sexual abuse, will likely prompt sustained police operations and public awareness campaigns. The full implications and enforcement practices of the new national security law, passed in March 2026, will become clearer, potentially leading to increased scrutiny of individuals and organizations perceived as challenging national interests. Cybersecurity will remain a high-priority area, with authorities likely to implement enhanced protective measures following the recent DDoS attacks on government websites. The upcoming Labour Day holiday period (May 1-5, 2026) will also test border control and crowd management capabilities, as authorities anticipate millions of crossings.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: A significant flashpoint could arise from the application of the new national security law, particularly if it leads to high-profile cases or perceived infringements on legal rights, potentially generating internal dissent or international criticism. The ongoing battle against cybercrime and sophisticated DDoS attacks targeting critical infrastructure remains a persistent risk, with potential for disruption to government services and the economically vital gaming sector. The persistent issue of overstayers and illegal workers, predominantly from mainland China, coupled with the surge in gaming-related fraud and illegal money exchange, poses a continuous challenge to social order and economic stability. The potential for these internal security issues to intersect with broader geopolitical tensions, especially concerning China's relations with Western powers, could also elevate risks, although current assessments suggest economic factors are more immediate.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and nature of arrests or prosecutions under the new national security law, particularly any cases involving political dissent or foreign alleged collusion. The effectiveness of cybersecurity measures in mitigating future attacks on government and critical infrastructure will be crucial. Trends in gaming-related crime statistics, especially illegal money exchange and fraud, will indicate the success of recent enforcement efforts. Public sentiment and any signs of social unrest in response to tightened controls or economic pressures should also be closely watched. Furthermore, any statements or actions from Beijing regarding Macau's autonomy or security posture will provide insight into the evolving "One Country, Two Systems" framework.

Strategic recommendations: Macau's authorities should prioritize a multi-pronged approach to cybersecurity, investing in advanced threat detection, incident response capabilities, and public-private partnerships to protect critical infrastructure. Enhanced cross-border intelligence sharing and operational cooperation with mainland Chinese authorities, as well as regional partners like Hong Kong and Singapore, are vital for combating organized crime, illegal immigration, and hybrid terrorist threats. Internally, targeted law enforcement efforts against gaming-related crime, coupled with robust social welfare programs and public education campaigns, can address underlying vulnerabilities. While upholding national security is paramount, maintaining transparency and due process within the legal system will be crucial to preserving Macau's unique legal identity and international reputation. Continued efforts towards economic diversification, as outlined in Macau's 3rd Five-Year Plan, are essential to build resilience against economic shocks and reduce over-reliance on the gaming sector, thereby indirectly enhancing overall security.
