Executive Summary

Myanmar experienced a significant escalation in military activity from October 31 to November 7, 2026, marked by intensified airstrikes by the military junta against ethnic armed organizations and civilian targets in Karen, Karenni, and Rakhine States. These operations led to direct cross-border impacts into Thailand, prompting diplomatic protests and heightened border security from Bangkok. The ongoing internal conflict continues to inflict heavy civilian casualties and displacement, exacerbated by the military's reliance on forced conscription to bolster its ranks. Concurrently, Myanmar's diplomatic landscape saw evolving dynamics, with increased engagement from the United States and Thailand with the junta, while the International Court of Justice (ICJ) prepares to deliver a critical judgment on alleged genocide. The overall security posture remains highly volatile, characterized by widespread human rights abuses and a complex interplay of internal and external pressures.

Key Security Developments

- Intensified Airstrikes and Border Spillover (October 31 - November 2, 2026)

Myanmar military aircraft conducted airstrikes on a Karen National Union (KNU) position across the Salween River from Mae Sam Laep, Thailand, on October 31, 2026. The blast waves and bomb fragments damaged approximately 17 homes and public buildings on the Thai side, including a health center, a child development center, a mosque, a temple, and a church. This incident was part of a broader intensification of airstrikes in Rakhine and Karenni States. The spillover prompted Thai officials to inspect Mae Sam Laep on November 1, and local leaders called for talks with Myanmar to prevent further harm to Thai residents and property.

- Civilian Casualties from Airstrikes in Karenni and Rakhine States (October 31 - November 5, 2026)

On October 31, 2026, a school for displaced children in Wan Ngao village, eastern Loikaw, Karenni State, was reportedly hit by a Myanmar military airstrike, resulting in the deaths of three students. In Rakhine State, local sources reported that 34 bombs were dropped within an hour on Pauktaw town and Ywar Chaung Gyi village on November 1, injuring five people, including a six-year-old. Further, a military airstrike on a maternity hospital in Mrauk-U on November 1 reportedly killed five people, including an infant, and injured at least nine others. On November 5, a pregnant woman was killed and more than 10 civilians injured when a military fighter jet bombed Nan Kyar Village in Mrauk-U Township.

• Clashes and Resistance Activity in Sagaing Region (November 4 - 6, 2026)

In Wetlet Township, Sagaing Region, a clash on November 4, 2026, between military troops and resistance forces resulted in the death of one military soldier and the seizure of an MA-3 assault rifle by Shwebo District Battalion No. 2. Separately, fighting intensified around Mawlu, with military forces reportedly conducting airstrikes, artillery shelling, and drone attacks. On November 6, military drones reportedly dropped explosives on cargo trucks near Mawlu Market, injuring an unconfirmed number of civilians.

• Thai Diplomatic Protests and Border Security Reinforcement (November 2 - 3, 2026)

Following the cross-border airstrike, the Thai government and senior Royal Thai Army officials summoned Myanmar's military attaché in Bangkok on November 2, 2026, issuing a stern warning to ensure that military operations do not harm Thai civilians or violate Thai sovereignty. On November 3, Thailand's National Security Council Secretary-General, Gen. Chaipruak Doungprapat, confirmed the deployment of troops and hardware to reinforce security along the Thai-Myanmar border, particularly opposite Myawaddy township.

• US Diplomatic Engagement with Myanmar Junta (October - November 4, 2026)

The United States has increased direct diplomatic outreach with Myanmar's military-backed government, holding two rounds of discussions in September and October 2026. These talks, which included US officials meeting with Myanmar representatives in Tokyo, focused on addressing online scam centers and exploring potential US access to Myanmar's heavy rare-earth minerals. This marks a shift in Washington's approach, which had previously limited ties after the 2021 coup.

• India Receives Credentials from Myanmar Ambassador (November 6, 2026)

On November 6, 2026, President Droupadi Murmu of India received the credentials of U Aye Min Htwe, the Ambassador of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar, at Rashtrapati Bhavan in New Delhi. This formal ceremony marked the official commencement of Myanmar's diplomatic representation in India, reaffirming longstanding bilateral ties.

• KNU Maintains Relations with Thailand Despite Junta Warnings (November 6, 2026)

The Karen National Union (KNU) stated that its relations with Thai authorities remain unchanged, despite formal demands from Myanmar's military junta urging Thailand to sever all contact with the ethnic armed organization. The junta had sent a warning letter on August 31, 2026, threatening airstrikes on the KNU-controlled Thaw Le Hta crossing if Thai traders continued to supply KNU forces.

- Forced Conscription and Military Recruitment Surge (October 29, 2026)

A report by ISP-Myanmar, published on October 29, 2026, revealed that Myanmar's military has increased its annual recruitment of new soldiers nearly eightfold since enforcing its conscription law. Between February 2024 and October 2026, over 136,300 individuals may have been recruited, with annual recruitment rising from approximately 7,200 to over 56,400 soldiers. This surge highlights the military's efforts to address manpower shortages amidst widespread conflict.

- ICJ Genocide Case Nears Judgment (November 3, 2026)

The International Court of Justice (ICJ) in The Hague, Netherlands, is scheduled to deliver its judgment on November 19, 2026, in the landmark case brought by The Gambia against Myanmar for alleged violations of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. This final and unappealable judgment will conclude the proceedings concerning Myanmar's state responsibility for genocide against the Rohingya.

- Illicit Economy and Cross-Border Scam Networks (October 31 - November 1, 2026)

Myanmar's Ministry of Foreign Affairs announced law-enforcement operations on October 31, 2026, targeting drug trafficking, human trafficking, online fraud, and cross-border scam networks. Reporting from October 30 to November 1 documented ongoing violence linked to online scam centers, illegal mining, human trafficking, and forced labor as nationwide security drivers, particularly in border zones and urban centers.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

The recent security developments in Myanmar have significant implications for regional stability and its relationships with major global powers. The intensification of military airstrikes and their spillover into Thai territory have directly strained relations with Thailand, a key ASEAN member. Bangkok's diplomatic protests and increased border security underscore the regional concern over the escalating conflict and its potential to destabilize border areas. This situation challenges Thailand's recent policy of re-engagement with Myanmar's military regime, which included high-level visits and technological cooperation, suggesting a complex balancing act between economic interests and border security.

The United States' increased diplomatic engagement with the Myanmar junta, driven by interests in rare-earth minerals and combating online scam centers, marks a notable shift in its foreign policy. This engagement, despite ongoing human rights abuses and the military's brutal civil war, could be perceived as a de facto acknowledgment of the regime, potentially undermining international efforts to isolate the junta and support democratic forces. China and Russia continue to provide crucial military and technological support to the junta, further entrenching the regime and complicating international efforts to resolve the conflict. These dynamics highlight a fragmented international response, where strategic and economic interests often take precedence over human rights concerns, allowing the junta to expand its international relationships and acquire new technologies.

The upcoming ICJ judgment on genocide on November 19, 2026, will be a pivotal moment, potentially increasing international pressure on Myanmar and its allies. While the judgment will not be a criminal case against individuals, it will legally determine Myanmar's state responsibility for genocide, which could lead to further sanctions or diplomatic isolation from some international actors. However, the varying approaches of major powers like the US, China, and Russia, along with regional neighbors, suggest that a unified international front against the junta remains elusive, contributing to the protracted nature of the conflict and its humanitarian crisis.

Military and Defense Analysis

Myanmar's military, the Tatmadaw, continues to rely heavily on air power to compensate for stretched ground forces and to project authority across contested territories. The documented airstrikes in Karen, Karenni, and Rakhine States, often targeting civilian infrastructure like schools and hospitals, underscore this operational doctrine and its devastating impact on the population. Despite facing significant territorial losses to ethnic armed organizations (EAOs) and People's Defense Forces (PDFs) in recent years, the military has intensified its efforts to regain control, particularly in central Myanmar.

A critical development in the military's force posture is the eightfold increase in annual recruitment since the enforcement of its conscription law. This aggressive recruitment drive, which has reportedly brought in over 136,300 new soldiers between February 2024 and October 2026, indicates the junta's desperate need to replenish its ranks and sustain its war effort. However, this strategy also highlights internal weaknesses and manpower shortages, as well as raising significant human rights concerns regarding forced recruitment. The military's capability developments are significantly bolstered by external support from China and Russia, which provide military hardware, including fighter jets, drones, counter-drone systems, training, and even forward-deployed technicians and advisers. This external assistance is crucial for maintaining the junta's operational capabilities and improving its battlefield responsiveness, particularly in authorizing air and artillery strikes.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): The current period is likely to see a continued intensification of military operations, particularly airstrikes, by the Myanmar junta in contested regions such as Karen, Karenni, Rakhine, and Sagaing States. The military will likely persist in its efforts to disrupt supply lines and bases of ethnic armed organizations and resistance forces. Cross-border spillover into neighboring countries, especially Thailand, is expected to continue, leading to sustained diplomatic tensions and localized border security responses. The junta's reliance on forced conscription will likely increase, leading to further internal displacement and human rights abuses as it attempts to bolster its depleted forces.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: Key flashpoints include the Thai-Myanmar border areas, particularly around the Salween River (Mae Sam Laep) and Myawaddy, where military operations risk direct engagement with Thai forces or further civilian harm. Within Myanmar, Rakhine State (Mrauk-U, Pauktaw, Sittwe), Karenni State (Loikaw), and Sagaing Region (Wetlet, Mawlu) will remain areas of intense conflict, with high risks of civilian casualties and displacement due to ongoing airstrikes and ground clashes. The approaching ICJ judgment on genocide also presents a critical flashpoint, potentially triggering further internal unrest or international diplomatic fallout.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and intensity of military airstrikes, particularly those impacting civilian infrastructure or crossing international borders. The number of civilian casualties and internally displaced persons will be crucial metrics for assessing the humanitarian impact. Diplomatic responses from Thailand and other ASEAN nations, as well as the nature and extent of continued US engagement with the junta, will indicate shifts in regional and international policy. The implementation and public reaction to the military's conscription efforts, along with any significant defections or gains by resistance forces, will be important for gauging the internal dynamics of the conflict. Finally, the international community's reaction to the ICJ judgment will shape future accountability efforts and diplomatic pressure on the regime.

Strategic recommendations: International actors should prioritize the protection of civilians by advocating for an immediate cessation of airstrikes on civilian areas and ensuring unhindered humanitarian access to affected populations. Coordinated diplomatic efforts are essential to de-escalate border tensions with Thailand and prevent further regional destabilization. While engaging with the junta on specific issues like scam centers, the international community must ensure that such engagement does not confer legitimacy on the regime or undermine broader efforts to promote human rights and democratic governance. Furthermore, sustained pressure through targeted sanctions and support for accountability mechanisms, including the ICJ process, remains crucial to address the root causes of the conflict and promote a long-term, peaceful resolution.
